Plan to Ease Business Tax Is Considered By New Deal

Review of Laws Begun by Special House Committee.

Treasury's Power Would Be Widened

Capital Gains Levy's Repeal to Spur Alien Trade Weighed.

By Robert C. Albright.

In a move to adjust administrative tax provisions to the business climb toward recovery, a special House Ways and Means sub-committee yesterday opened a review of Federal tax laws, in conference with Treasury experts.

Two specific proposals for eliminating minor taxation handicaps to trade were discussed by Internal Revenue spokesmen and members of the bipartisan sub-committee.

They were:

A plan to broaden the Treasury's power of compromise in tax cases by revising an antiquated exemption schedule to permit the department to soften the blow of delayed assessments in cases of extreme hardship.

Repeal Suggestion.

A suggestion for repeal of the capital gains tax on dealings of nonresides aliens on American stock and commodity exchanges, with a view to reviving legitimate transactions by foreign interests frightened away by the capital gains levy.

Representative Samuel B. Hill, of Washington, chairman of the subcommittee, made it clear that no action was taken on any of the proposals. Robert H. Jackson, general counsel of the Internal Revenue Bureau, succeeding Dr. Roswell Magill as the Treasury's tax adviser, outlined the proposals. Benjamin H. Bartholow, a special assistant to Secretary Morgenthau, took part in the conference.

Although members of the subcommittee represented the first proposal as additional authority for the Treasury to "compromise" in certain instances of serious tax strain, a representative of the Internal Revenue Bureau later insisted it does not want power to so settle big cases.

As explained in this quarter, the proposal would apply only in unusual cases, such as where the household furniture of a hard-pressed business man was threatened with seizure for taxes. As such, it was said, the proposal would aid the man rather than the corporation.

Committee View.

A spokesman for the committee insisted on the broader interpretation. Where a business was doing a good trade and making fine profits in 1929, though encountering rough sledding now, the Treasury in settling for taxes dating back to the profitable year could

Pair Get $1,000 In Holdup Here

Occidental Hotel Victim as Armed Men Loot Cash Drawers.

Holding up the night clerk in the Occidental Hotel, two armed robbers early yesterday escaped with more than $1,000 from the cash drawers of the hotel desk.

Entering the office about 3:30 a. m., one of the holdup men asked Merrit Greeley, of the 4700 block of Fifteenth street northwest, who was substituting for the regular clerk, for a room.

After a moment, he whipped out a revolver and demanded the money in the drawers. A colored man then entered, and drawing a pistol, trained it on Jesse Gantt, colored elevator operator, of the 1000 block of Euclid street.

Using a crowbar he had carried concealed on his person, the first robber broke the locks on the desk drawers and rifled them, while the colored man held Greeley and Gantt in the rear of the lobby with his revolver.

Cautioning the clerk and elevator operator not to move, the pair walked out of the door and fled up Pennsylvania avenue.

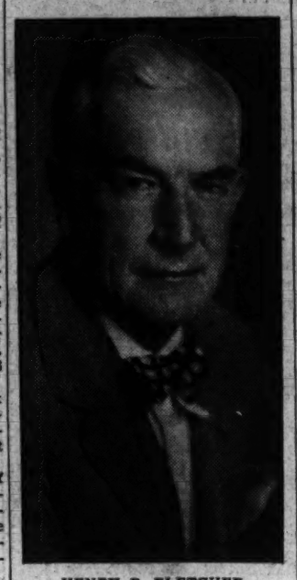
Mississippian to Hang For Theft of $1.50

Jackson, Miss., Dec. 3 (AP).—Barring executive intervention, O. C. Brown, colored, of Delta, must hang December 14 for robbing Charlie Fiume, a peddler, of $1.50 worth of merchandise. The Supreme Court today refused a suggestion of error filed by Brown's attorneys, who asked for a new trial.

During Brown's trial evidence was admitted showing that a deputy sheriff who heard of the robbery, chased Brown and was shot and seriously wounded by the man.

Fletcher Defies Foes Of Republican Set-up; Says He Won't Resign

Requa Rebukes Borah as Chairman States His Position.



HENRY P. FLETCHER, chairman of the Republican national committee.

Chairman Henry P. Fletcher, of the Republican national committee, last night answered Progressive Republican clamor for party reorganization with a plain-spoken statement that he has "no intention of resigning as chairman."

To do so, he said, would "plunge the party organization into confusion." In effect, he reminded Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, one of his critics, that the national committee can be called together for reorganization or other purposes, any time 16 members from 16 States prepare a petition.

His statement followed an attack on Senator Borah by Mark L. Requa, Republican national committeeman for California, and a retort by Senator Borah.

Requa, a close political friend of former President Hover, said Fletcher repeatedly had solicited suggestions from Borah to no avail. He said the Idahoan had been "eloquently silent when asked for helpful suggestions."

Borah's comeback was immediate. "They say I made no suggestions," he said. "I suggested over and over again that there would have to be a complete reorganization along more liberal lines. That is the suggestion they have had from me without exception and with some emphasis."

The Senate independent said he is making no suggestions now as to policy or program because he believes what he calls "reactionary" Eastern control of the committee should be completely supplanted before any discussion of policy. Voters would regard it as a "joke,"

Forced Study Of War Backed By High Court

Colleges May Compel Their Students to Take Training, Is Ruling.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

In a case which has aroused Nation-wide interest due to the growing pacifist movement, the United States Supreme Court yesterday ruled that State universities and colleges may compel their students to undergo military training.

Passing on the case of two youths expelled from the University of California because of their refusal to submit to military training because of conscientious objections and their religious beliefs, the high tribunal held that compulsory military training neither transgressed the Constitution nor was contrary to this Nation's treaty obligations.

Going beyond the issue before it, the court held that "undoubtedly every State has authority to train its able-bodied citizens of suitable age appropriately to develop fitness, should any such duty be laid on them, to serve in the United States Army or in State militia.

The court added that "so long as its action is within retained powers and not inconsistent with any exertion of the authority of the National Government and transgresses no right safeguarded to the citizen by the Federal Constitution, the State is the sole judge of the means to be employed and the amount of training to be exacted for the effective accomplishment of these ends."

The Supreme Court's action in upholding the validity of compulsory military training in the face of objections on grounds of religious beliefs settles a controversy which has raged at various times in different parts of the country in recent years. About two years ago the University of Maryland, attended by many Washingtonians, expelled Ennis Coale and Wayne Lees, Methodist students, for refusal to take military training.

These youths carried their case to the Maryland courts, which upheld the university. Young Coale

NRA to Study Pay and Hours In Auto Trade

Wide Inquiry to Determine If New Labor Benefits Are Feasible.

By Douglas Warrenfels.

A fine-tooth comb will be applied to automobile industry profits by NRA to determine whether the manufacturer can afford wage increases and hour reductions.

This was disclosed yesterday by Leon Henderson, Blue Eagle board member, as he retained a special staff of assistants to investigate the capital structure of the big corporations. The study will be completed before expiration of the code in February.

Mr. Henderson announced he personally would conduct a hearing into "all economic aspects of the industry as well as labor issues" at Detroit December 15 and 16. The inquiry will be one of the most exhaustive ever conducted by NRA.

Value of Study.

There have been recurrent threats of paralyzing Nation-wide strikes in both the automobile and steel industries. The Henderson study probably will prove the opening wedge in a drive by the New Deal to avert unrest and eliminate undesirable provisions in the automobile code, with which President Roosevelt has said he was "not fully satisfied."

Special attention will be paid by the investigators to an often-ex-

Typhoon Strikes; Boat Sinks, 5 Lost

Storms Again Assail Philippines, Dead Now 400.

Manila, Dec. 3 (AP).—Typhoons struck tonight in three areas of the Philippine Archipelago at once, climaxing a season of storms in which the dead and missing exceed 400.

One storm struck at northern Luzon, the island on which Manila is located. Another assailed the island of Palawan, coming in without warning out of the agitated China Sea. A third was brewed in the island-strewn Pacific within striking distance of Samar, the farthest east of the central Philippines.

The motor vessel Lindbergh sank, five of her crew losing their lives. The death toll from last Thursday's storm continued to mount, authorities tonight counting 28 known dead and 70 missing.

He Insinuates There'll Be No Corn on the (Irvin S.) Cobb

Bafflement over the century-old problem, "What is corn whiskey?" in the offices of the Federal Alcohol Control Administration yesterday gave way to a ray of light from the country's "cawn" authority, Irvin S. Cobb.

The illustrious son of Paducah, Ky., presented his definition of corn whisky to the Distillers Code Authority, who solemnly handed it on to the FACA. Harris E. Willingham, assistant director of the FACA, has requested the various code authorities and officials of alcoholic beverage industries to submit evidence on the proper definition of corn whisky at a hearing to be held tomorrow.

Mr. Cobb's definition is as follows: "This here fiery stuff called corn whisky, whether white or red, is an unlawful off-shoot from the bourbon tribe and among Kentuckians, at least, is regarded as but an illegitimate orphan of the royal line, born out of wedlock in the shine of the moon, left as a foundling on the doorstep of some convenient bootlegger and abounding in fusel oil.

"And it was not this corn whisky

Confident He Soared About 48,000 Feet; Reveals Peril.

Proposes to Surpass Present Mark in a Few Days.

Bartlesville, Okla., Dec. 3 (AP).—Confident he set a new airplane altitude record of some 48,000 feet today, Wiley Post announced tonight he would defy the stratosphere's howling gales and 70-degrees-below-zero cold again within "two or three days" in an attempt to fly 10,000 feet higher.

Post landed at Muskogee's "hatbox field" at 10:21 a. m., unwilling at first to estimate how high he had gone in his 2 hours and 11 minutes struggle.

He flew back to Bartlesville, 90 miles from Muskogee, and after looking over his instruments and calculating the time he was aloft and climbing approximately 1,000 feet a minute, said he believed he had reached about 48,000 feet.

The record of 47,352.2 feet is held by Lieut. Renato Donati, of Italy.

Will Hop Again Quickly.

Post said he would not wait upon an official check of his barograph before making another attempt if the weather is favorable.

The famous globe flier told of his battle alone above the clouds to adjust a faulty valve which he feared would release too much oxygen and cause his "stratosphere diving suit" to burst.

He could have survived, he said, "not more than ten seconds" if the suit, heated nad designed to maintain pressure in rarefied atmosphere, had given way.

Struggling with the valve, he was unable to keep a check on his altimeter after about 35,000 feet, which at first was as high as Post would say definitely he had gone.

Climbs 1,000 Feet a Minute.

The altimeter made a complete revolution every 10,000 feet, and Post said that he was climbing about 1,000 feet a minute, which would have necessitated frequent glances at the altimeter to keep accurate account of the height.

At 20,000 feet, Post said, he was circling over Bartlesville, keeping oriented by two lakes, one east and the other west of Bartlesville, and the Tulsa skyline about 40 miles south.

Then, as the supercharged motor of the Winnie Mae, single-motored monoplane in which he twice set world flight records, sang into the teeth of the gale, Post noticed the leaking oxygen valve.

Found Self Over Mountains.

Next he noticed that Tulsa "had moved west of me," then it had disappeared and he found himself over "nothing but mountains."

"I used the Arkansas River as a guide, he said, and flew back to Muskogee after traveling eastward as far as Fort Smith and the Arkansas Ozarks.

Refueling at Muskogee, he doffed his helmet but kept on the flying suit for the return to Bartlesville.

The barograph will be sent to Washington for checking, which will require about two days.

Ulm Winging Over Pacific To Honolulu

2,408-Mile Over-Water Hop First Leg in Dash to Australia.

Crowd Cheers Take-Off at Oakland; Chart New Air Line.

Oakland, Calif., Dec. 3 (AP).—Flight Lieut. Charles T. P. Ulm and his two flying companions took off at 3:41 p. m. (Pacific standard time) today on their transpacific flight to Honolulu and Australia.

The low-wing underslung silver and orange plane lifted slowly and quickly gained altitude toward the Golden Gate.

A small crowd was on hand for the take-off. Ulm expected to arrive in Honolulu tomorrow morning.

2,408-Mile Water Hop.

Ulm and his crew, Copilot George Littlejohn and Navigator J. L. Skilling, are charting the course of a new commercial air venture, which Ulm expected to inaugurate in regular operations from Australia to Hawaii in two years.

One of the longest all-water routes in the world lay ahead of Ulm.

Once he left the Farallone Islands, guardians of the Golden Gate, behind, not a speck of land will he see until Koko Head juts up on the horizon, 2,408 miles distant.

It will be an overwater hop with which Ulm is entirely familiar, however, and one flown several times by others since Lieuts. Lester J. Maitland and Albert Hegenberger blazed the way in June, 1927.

Kingsford-Smith's Copilot.

The heavily laden plane trundled nearly the entire length of the airport runway—about 5,000 feet—before it took to the air. There were 605 gallons of gasoline aboard. Littlejohn was at the controls.

Six years ago the Australian was copilot for Sir Charles Kingsford-Smith on the first transpacific flight in history, a 7,400-mile pioneering dash from Oakland to Brisbane, Australia, by way of Hawaii and the Fiji Islands.

Much the same route will be followed on the present flight, with some exceptions. The hop of 3,197 miles from Honolulu to Suva, Fiji, will be broken by a stop at Fanning Island, 1,000 miles out from Honolulu, and a bit to the east of the direct-line course.

Prince Cantacuzene Weds Again at 56; Ex-Clerk, 36, Bride

Sarasota, Fla., Dec. 3 (AP).—Prince Michael Cantacuzene Speransky, former major general in the Russian Czar's army but more recently vice president of a bank and supervisor of a large citrus grove, and Miss Jeanette Draper were married yesterday, it was learned here today.

Miss Draper was formerly a clerk in his bank.

The ceremony was performed at the home of a sister of the bride.

Recently the prince was divorced from Princess Julia Cantacuzene, who is now living in Washington as Mrs. Julia Cantacuzene-Grant.

In applying for the marriage license Prince Cantacuzene gave his age as 56, while the bridge said she was 36 years old. After the ceremony the prince and his bride left on a brief wedding trip to an unannounced destination.

Frankford, Ky., Dec. 3 (AP).—Grand jury investigation of published reports that efforts have been made to obtain pardons by forging the names of officials and jurors to pardon applications was ordered here today by Circuit Judge H. Church Ford.

Reprieve Is Indicated For Ill 'Mercy' Slayer

Hundreds of Appeals, Led by George Bernard Shaw, Answered; Mother, Who Killed Idiotic Son, Faces Death From Operation.

London, Dec. 3 (AP).—A reprieve for the gray-haired mother condemned to death for the "mercy slaying" of her imbecile son was assured today in a communication from the office of the home secretary, where hundreds of appeals for clemency have been received.

The frail, 62-year-old mother, Mrs. May Brownhill, was removed from the shadow of the gallows in an official action which set a record for speed in recent appeal cases in England.

The home office revealed the action in a communication to George Lansbury, Labor leader, who had been one of the prime movers against a judge's sentence and a jury's conviction, which was to have sent Mrs. Thornhill to her death for the slaying of her son, Denis. She gave him an overdose of sedative tablets and turned on gas.

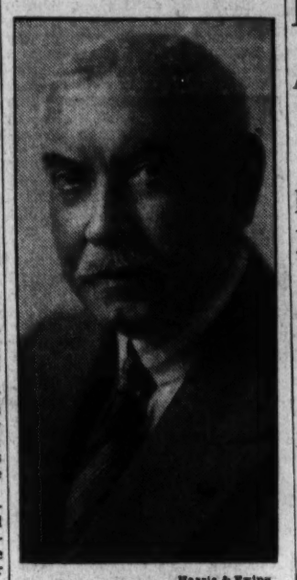
Court testimony revealed that her action was caused by fear for the future of her son, whom she had nursed for 30 years, when she was faced with an operation which might cost her life.

Several members of Parliament joined with Lansbury and George Bernard Shaw and others in urging clemency. Knowledge that a reprieve was to be granted came only a few hours after a petition for one had been formally filed.

Since Mrs. Brownhill was sentenced, however, it has become known that she must face another operation before she can be restored to health. A previous one, which she had feared she would not survive, was partially successful.

Reich Agrees to Buy France's Saar Mines, Raises Hope of Peace

Accord Eliminates Rich Basin as Immediate Danger Spot.



Harris & Ewing.

COUNT De CHAMBRUN, French Ambassador to Italy.

Rome, Dec. 3 (AP).—Germany and France clasped hands across the No-Man's Land of the troublesome Saar today in an accord tending to assure this part of Europe of at least a temporary breathing spell of peace.

Count de Chambrun, Ambassador of France, and Ambassador Ulrich von Hassell of Germany signed an agreement in the name of their governments designed to eliminate the rich Saar basin as a danger spot in European politics in advance of the January 13 plebiscite.

Under the accord, arranged under the auspices of a League of Nations committee, Germany agrees to pay 900,000,000 francs ($59,400,000) and 11,000,000 tons of coal for France's mines and private credits in the Saar basin.

Furthermore, the agreement guarantees that Germany will accord equal rights to voters and non-voters among all inhabitants of the Saar, regardless of race, religion or language.

France and Germany will write to the League of Nations identical letters stating these guarantees. The league now has jurisdiction over the Saar under provisions of the Versailles Treaty. The January 13 plebiscite puts it up to Saar voters whether they wish to continue this mandate, go to Germany or belong to France.

The agreement means that Germany will guarantee to Jews in the Saar equal treatment with gentiles.

The signing of the agreement early this afternoon found half a dozen German experts who have

Potomac Level Drops; Damage In City Slight

Little Danger of Rise Again Held Likely; Nearby Losses Heavy.

Washington has escaped serious flood damage. The Potomac was receding rapidly last night with little danger that the rain would be heavy enough to send the waters rising again.

Damage here was counted in a few flooded cottages along the river bank, destruction of the bridge connecting Roosevelt (Analostan) Island with the shore, and the tearing loose of several small boats from their upper river moorings.

The Weather Bureau saw no threat of more high water in the rain which began yesterday afternoon and is scheduled to last through today, unless it unexpectedly turns into a very heavy downpour.

County Losses Heavy.

While damage here was slight, tributaries of the Potomac in western Maryland and Virginia took one life and caused thousands of dollaars loss. Dams were damaged crops stored in fields carried away and bridges and roads washed out.

Although high water at Chain Bridge and Great Falls was well below its record, the river was a stirring spectacle. The volume of swirling waves made Great Falls into a slanted stretch of rapids, while at Chain Bridge piled against the abutments with the roar of heavy surf.

Two possible deaths were averted

Wire-Cutting Outlaws Are Reported Besieged

Eagle Pass, Tex., Dec 3. (AP).—A band of outlaws blamed for the cutting of a telephone line between Piedras Negras and Allende, Mexico, last Friday night was reported besieged today by Federal troops in the mountains of central Coahuila.

Mexican authorities said the band of about 50 was headed by Jose Maria Gonzales, former Piedras Negras policeman, and was believed to have revolutionary intentions.

Pardon Refused Banker.

Raleigh, N. C., Dec. 3 (AP).—Gov. Ehringhaus today refused to grant a parole or pardon at this time to Wallace B. Davis, former Asheville banker, now serving a sentence in State's prison for violation of State banking laws.

Tax 'Fix' Case To Go to Jury; Accuser Bared

McCarter, Utility Leader, Revealed as Would-Be Victim of Agents.

Evidence linking at least six persons with alleged attempts to "fix" tax cases pending before the Treasury Department will be unfolded before the District grand jury, United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett said last night.

Files containing information said to involve two dismissed Treasury Department employes, two brothers who are to be dropped, and two men described as being tax consultants will be delivered to his office some time this week, Mr. Garnett said. As soon as the information is received and digested, his aids will begin presentation of testimony before the grand jury in the hope of securing criminal indictments.

From the Treasury Department it was learned that Thomas N. McCarter, president of the Public Service Co. of New Jersey, and of the Edison Electric Institute, is scheduled to be one of the main witnesses. It was he, the Treasury intimated, who went to Secretary Morgenthau three weeks ago and disclosed advances that had been made to him to "enable" him to evade income taxes.

Offered 80 Per cent and Cut.

The Treasury secretary has characterized McCarter as a "public-spirited patriot" for his willingness to come forward to tell of the approaches made to him.

The story told by McCarter is that he was offered an 80 per cent reduction in a $150,000 tax case by certain tax consultants who have since been barred from practice before the Income Tax Bureau. McCarter refused to give a definite answer to the two men who approached him, and while the negotiations were pending he informed Morgenthau of what was occurring.

Following that disclosure, an investigation by the Treasury resulted in the dismissal of a high official of the bureau and one of its auditors. Two others have been

Tin Can War Upon Starlings Clatters in the Capital Tonight

The deafening clatter of a battle in the air will resound up and down Pennsylvania avenue this evening when the District launches the first attack of its annual war against the starlings.

Equipped with tin cans, filled with stones, which sound, when shaken, like cackling nests of machine guns, 50 men under the direction of the District Bureau of Trees and Parking, will climb ladders with their confusion-dealing weapons.

Once in the branches of the trees where the migratory starlings make their winter homes, Washington's warriors against the pestilential armada will vigorously shake the cans.

The chattering of the tens of thousands of feathered pests will change to startled cries when they encounter this barrage of racket, Clifford Lanham, superintendent of the Bureau of Trees, predicted yesterday.

"If there's anything the starlings hate, it's the rumpus and clatter of the cans," said Mr. Lanham. "They'll flee for dear life out of the trees."

The special anti-starling army is made up Emergency Relief workers. They will be on duty six hours at a time and draw 40 cents per hour. When the starlings have evacuated one tree, they will be followed to another. The entire downstown section of Pennsylva-

White Guards And Officials Facing Death In Soviet Plot

Assassination of Kiroff Results in Scores of Arrests.

Execution Decreed For All Terrorists

Stalin to Honor Slain Communist Leader at Leningrad.

Moscow, Dec. 3 (AP).—Thirty-nine "White Guards" from the Leningrad region and 32 others from the Moscow area were arrested tonight and charged with preparation of terroristic acts against officials of the U. S. S. R., presumably in connection with the assassination of Sergei Kiroff, secretary of the central executive committee.

The arrests followed the central committee's decree invoking anew the death penalty for Russian terrorists and providing swift trial and prompt execution of penalties, with no appeal from death sentence.

In addition to the arrests, the chief of administration of the commissariat of home affairs at Leningrad, named Medvied, together with six of his responsible assistants, was removed from office for negligence in safeguarding the state's security.

It was announced the "White Guards" will be tried by a military collegium of the supreme court. Medvied and his assistants also are to face trial.

Leningrad, U. S. S. R., Dec. 3 (AP). The death penalty for Russian terrorists was invoked anew today by the central executive committee of the Communist Party, as an aftermath of the assassination of Sergei Kiroff, secretary of the party's central committee.

Prompt trial and swift execution of penalties were promised terrorists in a resolution of the committee, adopted the day of the slaying and published today in Moscow. There is to be no appeal from death sentence.

Assassin's Confession.

The edict served to recall activities of the dreaded OGPU, which dealt summarily with counter revolutionaries until its power of life and death was curtailed two years ago.

Kiroff's assassin was identified in a government communique as Leonid Nicolieff, 30, former employe of the workers and peasants inspection bureau. The announcement said he had confessed and was still being questioned, but gave no indication of his motive or present political affiliations.

As Joseph Stalin, leader of the Communist Party, arrived to pay tribute to the memory of his slain associate, workers meeting in many cities demanded vengeance for Kiroff's death.

Typical of the resolutions adopted at these meetings is the following.

Beard Ordered To Stand Trial

Indictment Valid, Rules Justice on Gambling Charges.

In an oral opinion yesterday, Justice Oscar R. Luhring, District Supreme Court, ruled that the indictment against Sam R. Beard charging him with violations of the gambling laws was valid and that Beard and his 13 associates would have to stand trial.

An attack on the indictment was launched by Beard's attorney, John J. Sirica, on the theory that the indictment was illegal since Mrs. Elizabeth C. Downey's place on the grand jury which returned the indictment, while her services were ineligible because of a contract she held with the Government. The contract was in the form of a HOLC loan on her Georgia avenue home.

A recent act of Congress resulted in the Luhring decision. In the act it was provided that no indictment in Federal Court should be subjected to a plea in abatement because of the presence on the grand jury of an ineligible juror, unless such a vote was the deciding factor.

The Beard indictment grew out of a raid on the Mather Building, when an elaborate system of telephones was uncovered. Police alleged the outfit was sending out race track information that was being utilized in betting. Beard probably will be tried early in January.

Lieut. J. J. O'Connell Is Dead in Indo-China

The death of First Lieut. Jack J. O'Connell, Air Corps, at Saigon, French Indo-China, on Sunday, was reported at the War Department yesterday.

Lieut. O'Connell was on leave from the Philippines at the time of his death. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Laurie M. O'Connell.

Chinese Reds Center Forces At Kweichow

Drive on Wuchow Which Caused Alarm Seen as Feint for Main Move.

Hongkong, China, Dec. 3 (AP).—Thousands of so-called "Red Bandits," the main Communist body of central China which had sought to set up a republic within a republic, today were concentrating on Kweichow, between Kweilin and Chuenchow.

Information of the movement clairified an obscure situation in Kwangsi Province which had caused maneuvering of American and British gunboats and hte virtual evacuation by foreign missinaries of Wuchow, recently reported seriously threatened.

It appeared that the Communist threat against Wuchow was a feint, partly to obtain food and ammunition and partly to cover the passage of the main Communist body into Kweichow.

Hordes Centre on City.

Several scattered parties of reds were left to follow the main body, but it was estimated that two-thirds of the Communist hordes from Kiangsi and Fukien Provinces have now reached Kweichow.

The U. S. S. Mindanao, Yangtze River gunboat of the United States' Asiatic squadron, and the British gunboat Robin have left Wuchow, but H. M. S. Cicala remained there to protect foreign residents in case of eventualities.

Nationalist government troops were reported to have recovered all towns captured by the Reds in the Pinglo district after sharp engagements.

New Attacks Expected.

Further attacks weer expected from rear-guard Communist forces seeking to follow the main body.

No reliable figures were available as to casualties.

With the movement of Communist hordes to the westward the "republic within a republic," which had existed for six years in Kiangsi, is believed to be near extinction. The westwar dmovement of enemies of the government is expected to be carried to Szechuan Province in West Central China.

Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek, commander in chief of the Chinese government armies, now surrounding the remants of the short-lived Soviet republic in Kiangsi, has ordered the seizure of the remaining Communist strongholds before the end of the year.

Flandin Attacks Money Devaluation

France, Her Colonial Leaders Study Economic Ills.

Paris, Dec. 3 (AP).—France and her colonial possessions today began a search for means to pull each other out of the depression as 200 delegates from the homeland and its foreign outposts gathered for an imperial economic conference.

An increased exchange of products was the ultimate goal of the parley, formally opened by President Albert Lebrun.

Premier Pierre-Etienne Flandin assailed devaluation of the currency, replying to an earlier address by Paul Reynaud, former finance minister. The premier said devaluation "would result in increased prices within France as it did in England." The conference is expected to remain in session a month.

Officer Held Liable In Slaying of Man

Jackson, Miss., Dec. 3 (AP).—The Mississippi Supreme Court declared today that if more officers of the law would act like officers "instead of highwaymen," unnecessary tragedies might be averted.

In holding a Perry County sheriff civilly liable for the fatal shooting by one of his deputies of a suspected whisky still operator, the court criticized the command to Johnston Hinton, farmer, to "to put up your hands." Hinton allegedly did not comply and was killed.

Morgenthau Gives Ickes 'Jitters' on 80-Mile Auto Ride

Warm Springs, Ga., Dec. 3 (AP).—Secretary Morgenthau drove the official Secret Service car which met him today at Atlanta on the 80-mile trip to Warm Springs, but he had an uncomfortable passenger — Secretary Ickes.

"It was a great ride," said the Treasury Secretary as he emerged from the car.

"I am glad to be here," observed Ickes.

Between You and Me

Business Men to Protest NRA Arbitrary Legal System When Congress Meets.

By Raymond Clapper

When the question of reshaping NRA comes up in Congress, business men will be found devoting considerable energy to protesting against continuation of wholesale delegation of combined legislative, executive and judicial functions to the Recovery Administration.

They make the point that in fact, though not in name, NRA is a vast law-making organization in which hundreds of subordinate officials write the laws and enforce them. Every code requires presidential approval, from which there is no appeal. Between 4,000 and 5,000 methods of business conduct are prohibited by codes which have the force of law. James A. Emery, general counsel of the National Manufacturers Association, says that Administrative law resulting from operation of the Recovery Act has resulted in more than 3,000 administrative orders, covering more than 10,000 pages, and accompanied by more than 700 direct executive orders and innumerable opinions and directions from National, regional and code boards interpreting and enforcing provisions of the act. In addition, there are the rules of the code authorities themselves, each having the force of law and affecting the lives and conduct of millions of persons.

Administration of this vast mushroom growth of new Federal law is in the hands of 5,000 or 6,000 persons, it is estimated, mostly subordinates in an ever-changing personnel. It requires no imagination to appreciate the difficulty the business man has in keeping informed of these codes, supplementa codes, code amendments, executive orders, administrative orders, office orders, interpretations, rules, regulations and obiter dicta. Every code governs with the force of an act of Congress, and ignorance of the law is no defense.

It is nothing new to hear business men complaining that there are too many laws. They always have viewed the approachc of a session of Congress with apprehension and its adjournment with relief. Of late, however, the apprehension has been continual because when Congress quits the business of law making does not stop, but merely moves downtown, where it proceeds more furiously than ever.

Most business men realize that Congress must delegate considerable discretion to administrative agencies so that changing conditions may be dealt with promptly. It is impossible, they realize, for Congress to legislate down to the fine details. Executive officials must fill in the outlines of general policy laid down by Congress. The Brookings Institution finds some 60 different administrative tribunals making judicial decisions affecting private rights.

The complaint is not against the delegation of power, but in the manner in which it is done, especially failure to provide for an appeal from the decisions or orders of administrative bodies. great danger of abuse is seen when an executive officer has authority to say what the policy shall be, to say for instance that a merchant shall not sell for less than a given percentage of profit, and then proceeds to enforce this policy. Enforcement may be not only through the courts, but through executive pressure—as when NRA set up the Blue Eagle as an extra legal symbol of compliance. The Ford case illustrates the powers under administrative law. In this instance, the President, in an Executive order, required compliance certificates as a condition on all Government bids.

In all, the complaint is, this makes for irresponsibility, for arbitrary bureaucracy and leaves a minimum of protection to the individual.

One of the arguments in favor of shifting NRA compliance to the Federal Trade Commission or the Department of Justice is that it would separate enforcement from the law-making group, just as laws of Congress are enforced, not by the Senators and Representatives who write them, but by another set of persons.

The largest amount of AAA manna that has dropped in any one county in the country was picked up by farmers of Lamb County, Tex. When they counted ti up there was $1,612,140.05. Each of nineteen counties has received more than $1,000,000 from AAA. Kansas has four million-dollar counties; Mississippi, two; Oklahoma, four, and Texas, 19. There was'nt much left for New York State. Only two counties there drew more than $10,000.

Reporters have been a trifle hesitant about questioning Chairman Clay Williams, of NIRB. One of them, however, undertook to put him through a stretch of high-pressure questioning yesterday but he paused mid-way and began apologizing.

"That's all right, go head," said Williams.

"I thought you were giving me a dirty look," the reporter explained.

"Not at all," Williams said. "My shoe just came untied."

Cross-examination thereupon was resumed.

The reason for the decline in our cotton exports is out. Herr Hitler is wearing a suit of clothes which is 90 per cent beech fiber and 10 per cent cotton. All the Nazis are taking up the style. Germany and Italy, as part of a policy of self-sufficiency, are going in heavily for cloth made of wood fiber. It is said to be as good as cotton except that it can't e boiled in the laundry. However, there must be other ways of ruining a shirt.

HOLC Delinquents Face Foreclosure

Borrowers' Neglect to Bring Federal Action.

The bludgeon of foreclosure proceedings will be used on persons who willfully fail to meet payments on theidr mortgages to the Home Owners Loan Corporation, Chairman John H. Fahey announced yesterday.

"Although delinquencies to date are less than 20 per cent of the amount due," said Mr. Fahey, "it has been necessary to institute proceedings already in more than a score of cases. More than 70 per cent of the Corporation's borrowers are meeting their payments on schedule, but some of the borrowers are under the mistaken impression that the corporation intends to be unduly lenient, even to the extent of permitting them to maintain their homes without payment of interest or principal on their loans.

"Mortgagors who are deliberately delinquent when in a demonstrable position to pay will not be permitted to take an unfair advantage of the Government which has rendered them a great service."

was refused a hearing by the Supreme Court a year ago on the ground that he had failed to raise a substantial Federal question. The tribunal's decision yesterday, however, was regarded as confirmation of the Maryland courts in the Coale-Lees case.

Session Busiest This Year.

The decision was one of more than a score to come from the tribunal in the busiest session it has held this year. Other decisions upheld the Constitutionality of a Maryland law designed to give emergency relief from mortgage foreclosures; sent back for a further hearing a case challenging the validity of orders under the New York milk price act; settled a unmber of Federal tax disputes and rejected a request to review a conviction growing out of the famed Sir Francis Drake estate swindle.

The California military training decision was unaminous, although Justice Benjamin N. Cardozo wrote a supplementary concurring opinion in which Justice Louis D. Brandeis and Harlan F. Stone joined. In this opinion the three justices held that "there is no occasion at this time to mark the limits of governmental power in the exaction of military service when the Nation is at peace," and the present case arose solely on the basis of required training.

It was the first time in several years that the tribunal has been unanimous in passing on aspects of compulsory military training and service. The decision cited approvingly the court's opinions in the naturalization cases of Mme. Rosika Schwimmer and Prof. Douglas C. MacIntosh. In the first of these cases three members of the court dissented and in the latter the decision was a 5-to-4 one.

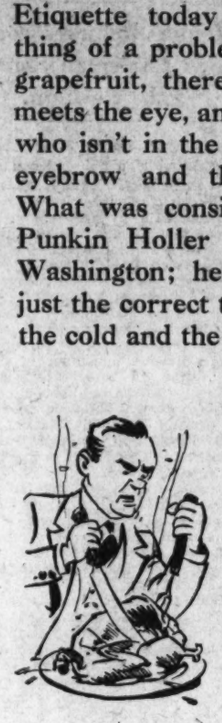
Etiquette today has become something of a problem. Even in eating grapefruit, there is more to it than meets the eye, and the man or woman who isn't in the know gets the lifted eyebrow and the social raspberry. What was considered good form in Punkin Holler simply won't do in Washington; here, you've got to do just the correct thing or you're out in the cold and the rain.



For instance, when you carved that turkey last Thursday, were you sure that you held the knife correctly, and passed the plates in the proper order? Or did your wife glare and mutter, "No, Algernon, serve Aunt Minnie first?" Have you been invited to the White House, and aren't sure how to reply? Or are you worrying about the proper style for Mary's wedding invitations? All right, just consult Hope Ridings Miller, The Washington Post's authority on good form, and your troubles will soon be over. Hope knows her etiquette, from how to avoid using the wrong fork to whether the girl should invite him in after the theater. After consulting her, you'll soon be such a polished fellow that even your wife will admit it.

We cite the case of Oscar Pumpernickel. Time was when Oscar boasted that he could beat a woman to a street car seat every time. He had never learned to balance a teacup and a sandwich plate on his knee, and he thought R. S. V. P. was another New Deal bureau. We had almost despaired of Oscar when a kind friend told him about Hope Ridings Miller's column in The Washington Post every Sunday. Now Oscar is so polite and at ease at social gatherings that twice he has been mistaken for a head waiter. And what Hope did for Oscar Pumpernickel, she can do for you.

Whether your problem is how to carve a turkey without tearing it limb from limb, or how to bend the corner of your visiting cards to mean, "I came over to see you and you weren't home; now you must come up and see me sometime," we are sure that she can help you. Each Sunday, she discusses some problem of etiquette, and, since her articles give authentic expositions of Washington social customs, they are required reading. You'll find Hope Ridings Miller's column on etiquette each Sunday in

Monarchists In Spain Plan Bid for Power

Aim to Form Corporative State With Help of Rightists.

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press.)

Madrid, Dec. 3.—A combination of monarchist forces and extreme rightists is preparing an unexpected bid for power under a modified "corporative state" plan, it was stated tonight in high monarchist quarters.

The purpose of the plan, which is to be announced shortly, was described as to give the Spanish republic "a type of modern corporative state based upon the old Spanish traditional system," ruled by a rightist united front.

It was denied the project was related to Fascism, although it is somewhat similar to Fascism in some of its points.

To End Old Conflict.

The scheme has the double objective of terminating the centuries-old Carlist-Bourbon conflict and uniting the monarchists into one group, and the creation of an ambitious "national nonpartisan bloc" under the leadership of former Minister Jose Calvo Sotello, which would admit to membership monarchists, extreme right Republicans, Fascists and any others who wished to join.

Sotello will publish a proclamation within a day or so, giving the general outlines of the plan which will include provisions designed to please the Spanish workers.

Sotello would revive and improve "certain traditional institutions" in Spain. Among provisions of his plan would be system by which guild and labor organizations would be granted representation as such in the cortes, or parliament.

Socialists Outlawed.

Labor organizations naturally are nonpartisan in nature, and parties such as the Socialists would be outlawed under the proposed new Spanish regime.

Prominent Republicans viewed the movement as the beginning of a veiled monarchist restoration campaign. This opinion was stregnthened by information from monarchist sources that negotiations were being carried on for an attempted reconciliation of the Carlists and the Alfonsists, the two factions which for generations had divided Spain's monarchist regime.

The aged Alfonso Carlos is the Carlist pretender to the Spanish throne. He has no heir. The attempted reconciliation contemplates selecting Alfonso of Bourbon, nephew of the former king, as his heir.

Confer With Alfonso.

It was considered probable that the Infante Juan, son of former King Alfonso, would be chosen heir to Alfonso of Bourbon, thus uniting the branches of the former royal family. It was reported that monarchist leaders had been conferring with former King Alfonso regarding his nephew's acceptance of the new role.

Alfonso of Bourbon is 32 years old, a former captain in the Spanish army, and has been residing in France since the republic was established in Spain. He is a close friend of the former king. He is a son of the former king's older sister, the Infanta Mercedes, and the Infante Carlos Caserta.

According to informants, practically all the Carlist and Alfonsist deputies in Parliament favor Sotello's plan. Discussions are proceeding with 15 or 20 extreme rightists, who are virtually monarchists, now affiliated with Jose Maria Gil Robles, rightist leader.

Action Against Officers Ordered.

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe today authorized trustees in bankruptcy for Paramount-Publix Corporation to bring plenary action against former officers, directors and executives of the corporation to recover sums said to amount to several million dollars.

Australians Fight Snakes From Trees In Raging Floods

Melbourne, Australia, Dec. 3 (AP). After a night of terror which many spent in trees beating off snakes swimming in surrounding waters, thousands of residents of flood devastated communities near here watched swollen rivers recede today.

The unprecedented flood, gravest disaster in the State of Victoria's history, cost the lives of 40, left approximately 8,000 homeless and caused damage estimated at $5,000,000.

Two thickly populated communities north and east of here were inundated by the swiftly rising waters. Inhabitants sought refuge on hills and rooftops as their homes and live stock were swept away.

Relief workers employed airplanes to drop blankets and supplies to marooned refugees. The township of Kooweerup was evacuated, leaving 2,000 homeless. Six residents were drowned. Hospital patients at Gippsland were rescued through a hole in the roof.

Allegany County Gets Many Rabbits

If Approved by Board, Will Replenish Stock.

Cumberland, Md., Dec. 3 (Spl.).—Liberation of about 10,000 new rabbits in Allegany County this winter will be the first act in three years to replenish the stock in this section. The State health department will have to approve the action, but is expected to do so, as the county is entirely free of rabbit fever.

A ban on bringing rabbits into Allegany County was established in 1932 and rabbits have become more scarce each year. The scarcity was especially noticeable this season. Joseph A. Minke, deputy game warden, hopes to be able to stock at least 10,000 rabbits next February and March.

The game department also is holding 50 wild turkeys at the game farm for liberation at the close of the season for brood stock for the hunting next year.

Austria Is Fostering Anti-Semitism, Charge

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—The American Jewish Congress charged today that anti-Semitism is being fostered by the Austrian government ,and sent a memorandum to the Austrian minister, Edgar L. G. Prochnik, asking for the restoration of equality rights to Austrian Jews.

The note, signed by Bernard S. Deutsch, president of the Congress, declared that Austria is nullifying the racial equality provisions in the Treaty of St. Germain.

Sister's Tip Is Seen LikelyClew in Hunt For Murder Motive

Roseville, Calif., Dec. 3 (AP).—Information that may give a clue to the motive behind the deaths of Elmo J. Noakes, 32-year-old car helper, his 18-year-old niece and Noakes' three children in Pennsylvania was disclosed here today by his sister-in-law, Mrs. R. U. Noakes.

She told investigators that shortly before Noakes left with Winifred Pierce, the niece, and his children, the niece cam to hr and said she would lave with Noakes and the children for Redding, Calif., in a short time. The niece was housekeeper for Noakes, whose wife was dead.

The girl asked her to forward any mail to Redding, Mrs. Noakes said, pledging her to keep the plans secret until "Elmo could get settled and pay up his debts."

Mrs. Noakes said she forwarded some letters to Redding and it was learned three are being held there, one from Stockton, another from Sacramento and a third from Salt Lake City. Authorities said they would seek to obtain the letters.

How to Be Happy —Though Married —Course for Men

Seattle, Dec. 3 (AP).—A course in marriage to instruct men students how to avoid unhappy unions is being considered by the University of Washington, Dr. Norman S. Hayner, associate professor of sociology, disclosed today.

Dr. Hayner said two-thirds of the marriages of the university's graduates are successful and the suggested course—in problems o fcourtship, engagement, the wedding, adjustments in personalities, child training, divorce and the problems of the unmarried—should tend to make moer of them successful

The course, open only to senior men, would compromise "frank discussion of marriage problems." He said it would be identical with one offered at the University of North Carolina. Similar courses, he said, are offered at the Universities of Wisconsin and Michigan.

Dr. Jesse F. Steiner, head of the sociology department, termed the suggested course 'much-needed in our modern,' cultural world," but, like Dr. Hayner and other members of the department, he said he recognized "tremendous pressures and taboos have prevented many universities offering such courses."

Sister-in-Law Of Lindbergh Dies on Coast

Former Elisabeth Morrow Succumbs to Pneumonia After Appendectomy.

Pasadena, Calif., Dec. 3 (AP).—Weakened by pneumonia that followed an appendicitis operation, Mrs. Elisabeth Morrow Morgan, 30, sister-in-law of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, died in a hospital here early today.

At her bedside were her mother, Mrs. Dwight W. Morrow, widow of the Ambassador to Mexico, and her husband, Aubrey Neil Morgan, formerly of Cardiff, Wales.

Mrs. Morgan's sister, Mrs. Anne Morrow Lindbergh, was notified and she and Col. Lindbergh were expected to come here at once from the East.

Strain on Heart Too Much.

Although Mrs. Morgan had been critically ill for several days, she appeared to improve yesterday. The long strain on her heart proved too much, however, physicians said, and she died at 2:50 a. m.

Mrs. Morgan and her husband came to California last spring because of her ill health. Early last month as she boarded a liner for a cruise to Mexico she was stricken with appendicitis. She underwent an operation November 10. When pneumonia developed later, her mother flew here from the family home in Englewood, N. J.

Funeral arrangements had not been announced. It was understood, however, burial will be in the Morrow family plot in Brookshire Cemetery, Englewood, where the body of the late Ambassador lies.

Taught School in Mexico.

Mrs. Morgan was born at the Morrow estate at Englewood. She attended Dwight School in Englewood, Milton Academy in Milton, Mass., and Smith College, where she was graduated in 1925.

After a year's study in Paris, she returned to Englewood and taught English in Dwight School. When her father went to Mexico City as United States Ambassador to Mexico, she transferred her teaching activities there.

During the family's stay in Mexico, Col. Lindbergh began the courtship that led to his marriage to Anne Morrow, Elisabeth's sister.

In 1930, Elisabeth returned to Englewood and opened her own school. She later accompanied her father to the London naval conference. On this visit she met Morgan. They were married in December, 1932.

Virginia Board Bars Six Films

One Nudist Movie Among Half Dozen Rejected, Reid Reports.

Richmond, Va., Dec. 3 (AP).—Total rejection of six motion pictures last year, including one nudist film, is reported by the Virginia board of motion picture censors in its annual report for the fiscal year ended June 30.

With the exception of the nudist film all those rejected have been or will be resubmitted in revised form, Edwin S. Reid, chairman of the board said.

Among other films which the board reported it had censored heavily were "so-called 'health' films treating of irregular sex relations," gangster films dramatizing crime and "sophisticated" films abounding in risque dialogue or scenes.

Short comedies were found to be the most frequent offenders against the board's ideas of good taste and propriety.

Durin gthe year the board operated on a contracted budget and returned to the State treasury a surplus of $13,909.58 of fees paid on the films it viewed. It looked over 1,415 films during the year, as compared with 1,564 the preceding year.

A consolidated report for the 12 years of the board's existence showed 20,987 films examined, 43 rejected in toto (of which 24 were approved when submitted in reconstructed form), and 4,349 eliminations made in 1,691 films. Total receipts have amounted to $315,806.85, and expenses to $235,343.38, laving a surplus of $80,463.47 earned for the State.

Manufacturers Of Soft Drinks Open Sessions

Dr. Maxey, of U. of Va., Is Speaker at Virginia Bottlers' Parley.

Charlottesville, Va., Dec. 3 (Spl.).—Speaking at the opening business session today of the twenty-fifth annual convention of the Virginia Manufacturers of Carbonated Beverages, Dr. Kenneth C. Maxey, professor of health and hygiene at the University of Virginia, discussed the causes of food poisoning and told the delegates what could be done to prevent any possible injuries from the beverages they manufacture.

The convention was called to order at the Monticello Hotel by President L. P. Rawley, of Washington. Following the invocation by the Rev. Dwight M. Chalmers, of the Presbyterian Church, the visitors were welcomed by Mayor W. Dandridge Haden. The response was by N. L. Beville, of Blackstone.

Reports from officers of the association were read and committees named. E. G. Scott, of Lynchburg, spoke of the past, present and future of the industry, and President Rawley reported on the national convention held during the summer at Buffalo.

This afternoon the delegates attended a luncheon as guests of the Virginia Bottlers Boosters Club, of which L. B. Gray, of Washington, is president, and Frank Jones, of Richmond, is secretary and treasurer.

The annual banquet of the association was held tonight in the Monticello Hotel, with Samuel A. Jessup, of Charlottesville, as toastmaster. The principal address was made by John S. Battle, of Albemarle, member of the State senate. The banquet was followed by a dance.

Speakers at the closing business session tomorrow will include Maj. C. W. Dunning, of Washington, deputy administrator of the National Recovery Administration, and W. L. Sams, code administrator for Virginia.

Racial League Not to Take Part In Jones Case

N.A.A.C.P. Commends Tow Authorities for Action; Venue Change Asked.

Richmond, Va., Dec. 3 (Sjl.).—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People "will take no part at this time" in the defense of Philip Jones, colored, of Clifton Forge, indicted along with three other colored persons on charges of murdering two small white children near Clifton Forge a few weeks ago, Dr. J. M. Tinsley, president of the local chapter of the N. A. A. C. P., said today.

Dr. Tinsley commended the authorities at Clifton Forge for their action in quickly removing the accused from the Clifton Forge area, thereby avoiding the possibility of a lynching.

Jones will be tried on December 10 in the Alleghany Circuit Court at Covington.

Meanwhile, newspapers and prominent citizens of Covington and Alleghany County have been urging a change of venue, on the grounds that there is still the possibility that an attempt may be made to lynch the accused if he is brought to rtial in the county where the crime was committed.

"Brothers and comrades: the proletariat of Leningrad has lost its leader, under whose guidance we destroyed the enemies of the workers' class, the traitors of the party, and the Trotzky and Zinovieff opposition.

"It was under his control that we, Putiloff workers, produced our first tractor, and under his control that we raised the production to tens of thousands.

"We will give blow for blow to our enemy. Death to the enemies of the working class!"

Kiroff's body lay in state in Uritzky Palace, where it was viewed by thousands today. His ashes will be interred in Moscow under the Kremlin wall near Lenin's tomb. Flags were placed at half-staff throughout the republic.

Skyline Drive Offer by Scott Wins Approval

Road to Pass Through His Estate at Tigher Level Than First Planned.

Charlottesville, Va., Dec. 3 (AP).—groups interested in the southern extension of the Skyline Drive today accepted as satisfactory to them an agreement by Frederic W. Scott, not to oppose a right of way through his Royal Orchards estate which would remain above a 1,900 feet elevation.

This proposal was made and accepted at a conference here between James Scott, of Richmond, a nephew of the Richmond financier and rector of the University of Virginia Board of Visitors, and officials of the Charlottesville and Waynesboro Chambers of Commerce.

The Chambers had opposed a previous proposal made to State Highway Commissioner Shirley on behalf of Mr. Scott and referred to National Park officials which would have routed the road through the Royal Orchards estate farther to the West and at lower level than the original survey.

The route discussed today would fix the lowest level for the road at the height of Rockfish Gap and would permit the parkway to reach the crest of the Blue Ridge on the gap at the Swanannoa Club entrance near Afton. It was agreed that the exact line of the parkway within the boundaries of Mr. Scott's property above this level shou.. be settled with National Park Service engineers.

Attending the meeting were James Scott, Mayor W. D. Haden, Fred L. Watson, City Manager Seth Burnley, S. A. Jessup, Vernon Kemp and E. E. Burruss, of the Charlottesville Chamber of Commerce; Hollis Rinehart, of Charlottesville, and City Manager I. V. Vass and Delegate C. G. Quisenberry, of Waynesboro.

Rabbi Upholds Butler Charge Of National Plot by Fascists

Baltimore, Dec. 3 (AP).—Rabbi Edward I. Israel, of Har Sinai Temple, today warned his congregation against the "national menace" of Fascism.

He scored the press for "making sport of" the recent statement of Maj. Gen. Smedley D. Butler, U. S. M. C., (retired), that he had been approached by a Fascist to lead a march on Washington.

Rabbi Israel said he had documentary evidence that groups with Fascist leanings in America had united and, with aid of the German Nazis, were forming a definitely Fascist organization.

He criticized those who did not take Gen. Butler's "expose" seriously.

Called "National Menace."

Asserting "it was a good job" when Baltimore papers "laughed the Ku Klux Klan out of Maryland," Rabbi Israel said:

"This Fascist movement is different. It is a national menace."

He read a letter, the source of which he would not reveal, which contained essentially the same charges made by Butler and which he said was written a month before Butler's testimony.

The letter stated Butler, cognizant of the Fascist movement, pretended to be in sympathy with it and learned details of the plot to march on Washington.

Rabbi Israel said Butler's charge that CCC camps would be the nucleus of a storm troop organization was correct. He said it was "untrue" that a camp at Elkridge, Md., would be the focal point of the plot. Newspapermen "jumped at this conclusion," he asserted.

"Obviously a wealthy reactionary group trying to retard economic recovery in America through the establishment of a dictatorship," was behind the plot, Rabbi Israel said.

Terms Situation "Grim."

"For the Jews of America the situation holds grim forebodings, but even more, it holds tragedy for every true American citizen, especially Christians," he said.

"If it goes on, it will mean the end of American political tradition of Jefferson and Lincoln and the end of Roger Williams, Channing, Parker and Beecher."

Liquor Board Asks Support

Lynchburg Grand Jury Urged to Stop Illicit Trade in Jurisdiction.

Norfolk, Va., Dec. 3 (AP).—While a Lynchburg grand jury today was being charged with responsibility for seeing that the illegal liquor traffic is stopped, Maj. S. Heth Tyler, chairman of the State Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, said here that until localities cooperate in enforcing the law the new liquor control system will not have a fair trial.

Norfolk and Richmond police, Mr. Tyler said, are making an effective effort to enforce the laws but in his opinion local authorities in other parts of the State are not exerting themselves to put the new control system into effect.

He expressed hope that when the ABC board begins to pass on to the localities a share of its revenues there will be more cooperation.

"The greater the enforcement," he said, "the greater will be the share the localities will receive from the profits. If the bootlegger is allowed to continue to operate our profits of course will be reduced."

Virginia Liquor System Passes Many States

Profits Above Estimates as Nation Marks Repeal Anniversary.

Richmond, Va., Dec. 3 (Spl.).—As America celebrates the first year of prohibition repeal this week, Virginia is finding itself with a system which, contrary to the experience of the national Government and of some other States, is at least successful from a financial point of view. For the minimum estimate of State revenue from liquor during the first fiscal year today was placed $2,000,000, with $1,100,000 already in the treasury as of November 1.

Virginia's State liquor monopoly offered liquor for sale first on May 15, 1934, so that the revenue of $1,100,000 represents State revenue for a period of but 5½ months. And during much of this period only a few State stores were in operation. There now are 67 stores, all of them operating at a profit.

The General Assembly estimated profits during the first fiscal year at $1,650,000.

The national anniversary of repeal finds Virginia ready to announce a completed system, for the board has decided that there are sufficient stores in operation or projected at this time to satisfy the present demand. Not more than three more may be opened this year, making 70 in all.

Virginia is one of 13 States experimenting with a State monopoly in the liquor selling business and, while the conflict between wets and drys continues with the drys gaining some power since repeal, there has been no major dissatisfaction with the plan thus far.

Guide Cut to Quick By Lincoln's Name In Virginia Capitol

Richmond, Va., Dec. 3 (AP).—Stonewall Goddin, the capitol guide, who takes a personal pride in the restored Old Hall of the Virginia House of Delegates, has a deep sense of patriotism, and at the same time he has an inborn love for the Confederacy, which has been hurt, he says.

He tells this story:

"The other day I was showing a lady through the capitol. We had just gone through the Old Hall, where I pointed to the new statue of Gen. Lee. We came out into the rotunda, and there I showed her the busts of the Virginia-born Presidents in the niches.

"I nearly fell over when she asked me why we didn't have a bust of that great American, Abe Lincoln."

marked for dismissal, and the two remaining names that will be connected with the inquiry are those of the tax consultants who are alleged to have been working with "insiders" in the Treasury.

A thorough investigation of the suspected persons is being made. Their bank accounts are being scrutinized and their income tax returns are receiving attention from both Department of Justice and Treasury Department officers. In addition, all the tax cases handled by the suspected officials will be audited to see if any other cases with "peculiar" angles" have been sent through improperly.

Mr. Garnett said last night that he had been in communication with the Treasury. Further investigation by the trained agents of the Department of Justice is awaited before the matter will be presented to the grand jury, which already has a full schedule ahead of it this week.

Germany Will Buy Saar Basin Mines

Delegates Work Long.

They worked all Saturday until 1 a. m. Sunday, then all Sunday until 6 a. m. today. They went away for a few hours' solitude at 10 a. m. to draft a communique.

Part of the time they worked with members of the Saar committee of three—Baron Pompeo Aloisi, of Italy; Lopez Olivan, of Spain, and Ambassador Cantillo, of Argentina—but most of the time they threshed out their problems among themselves.

Olivan, the Spanish committee member, receiving the foreign press this afternoon, heartily praised the cooperation of both French and German experts, and said he haped the agreement reached today would bring peace to Europe.

Tonight the committee of three was en route to Geneva, where tomorrow they will prepare the report for submission to the league council next Wednesday.

Method of Payment.

It was understood the accord included a method of payment to France which would not interfere with Germany's foreign exchange situation, although it was not explained how this is to be arranged.

The mines in the Vaant region of the Saar, on the French frontier, were made part of a separate section of the agreement.

Germany agreed to pay France a few francs for each ton of coal she takes from these mines during the next five years. Many of these mines actually extend under French territory.

The political guarantees would be binding alike on France or Germany should the prebiscite go one way or the other. Nothing was said, however, regarding the third possibility, that of continuance in status quo under league supervision, but the committee defined in a meeting several weeks ago what the status quo would mean if the Saar voters made this choice.

Fletcher Hurls Defi at Critics Of G.O.P. Set-up

Asserts He Won't Resign as Chairman; R(equa and Borah Clash.

he said, if the party as now organized should advocate a liberal program.

Fletcher Issues Defy.

Fletcher became almost caustic in his reply to critics.

"If it is a change in the official personnel of the national committee that is desired by those asking for a 'reorganization of the party,' their freedom of action is unimpeded," he said, explaining the prescribed method of calling the committee together.

"In event the committee were called in that manner, there is not the slightest doubt that it would accord those back of the reorganization movement the courtesy of a full opportunity to present their case to the committee.

"If they were convincing, the committee would select a new set of officers who would assume the responsibility of paying off the existing deficit, financing the committee from now until the convention of 1936, and making all arrangements for that convention."

Calls for Full Support.

Fletcher said he would have no desire to remain in office without support both from the rank and file of Republicans and the committee which elected him. e repeated his opposition to what he called "the 'muddling' of the New Deal." And he announced that his present intention is to call the executive committee of the Republican National Committee together "later on" to discuss "only questions or organization and finance."

Wants Policies Studied.

"I had hoped that the year and a half which will elapse before the meeting of the next Republican national convention would afford all elements of the party an opportunity to advance and discuss the policies which they believe should be adopted when the next national convention assembles to formulate its program and nominate its candidates," he continued.

"The intervening time would give party workers and the party press an opportunity to consider the various proposals advanced. The Republican Party and its national, State and local organizations would have nothing to lose and much to gain from such a period of candid discussion."

"Candid Opinion" Sought.

He denied there has been any effort to discourage "the freest discussion of the future policies of the party," pointing out that all members of the national committee, all Republican State chairmen and 2,500 county chairmen have been solicited for "a candid expression."

Reorganization, he said, would mean a change in either party principles and policies or in official personnel, or both. An attempt either by the committee or its officials to write a party platform, he said, would constitute "usurpation."

If a change of principles is desired, he said, those advocating the proposals should submit them, or attempt to translate them into concrete legislative action in Congress.

Irvin S. Cobb Gives Lowdown on Corn

or 'moonshine' but true and regal bourbon (which averages 60 per cent maize) that the late Will Lampton had reference to when he penned his immortal verse with its forgivably libelous tag-line:

"'Kentucky, oh, Kentucky,
"'How I love your classic shades, where flit the fairy figures
"'Of the star-eyed Southern maids;
"'Where the butterflies are joying
"'Mid the blossoms newly born;
"'Where the corn is full of kernels
"'And the colonels full of corn.'

"Warning: Illicit corn liquor may easily be identified by these: It smells like gangrene starting in a mildewed silo; it tastes like the wrath to come, and when you absorb a deep swig of it you have all the sensations of having swallowed a lighted kerosene lamp.

"A sudden violent jolt of it has been known to stop the victim's watch, snap both his suspenders and crack his glass eye right across—all in the same motion.

"Personally, I would recommend it only to persons who are headed for the last hiccup and want to get it over with as soon as possible. And if you must drink it, always do so while sitting flat on the floor. Then you don't have so far to fall."

The Administration said that the famous Kentuckian's definition would be given "careful consideration."

Starlings Facing War of Tin Cans

nia avenue will be under attack and counter-attack tonight.

"The starlings do not seem quite as numerous this year as last," commented one official yesterday.

"To the average annoyed person, they might still appear to number in the millions. Maybe last year's severe winter sent many of them further south. But they're formidable, and a menace."

So formidable are they, indeed, that Mr. Lanham said yesterday the tin-can war is only the first step.

Later dozens of bright-colored balloons, held in leash by cords, will be sent skyward to building ledges and window sills to frighten them away.

The balloons, a new weapon in starling warfare here, already have been purchased.

Boy Wounded By Playmate Is Recovering

But Doctors Are Unable to Remove Bullet in Maryland Victim.

Westminster, Md., Dec. 3 (Spl.).—Elisha Naill, 7, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Naill, Westminster, Carroll County, who, according to officers, was accidentally shot in the head with a bullet from a .32-caliber rifle held by a playmate on November 18, is still a patient at University Hospital, Baltimore.

According to Dr. Charles R. Foutz, of Westminster, physicians at the hospital have been unable to remove the bullet from the child's head. The boy's condition, however, is reported as favorable.

Mrs. Avis Strohl, 37, of Union Bridge, Carroll County, shot twice through the abdomen with a .38-caliber revolver by Harry Gordon Bush, 53, a railroad engineer, who later committed suicide, is still in a serious condition at Maryland General Hospital, Baltimore.

Physicians at the hospital reported that an operation to remove the bullets, lodged in her spine and kidney, has been prevented by Mrs. Strohl's weakened condition, owing to loss of blood. The shooting occurred in the kitchen of Mrs. Strohl's home at Union Bridge, on the night of November 18. Authorities have not learned the motive which caused Bush to shoot Mrs. Strohl and then turn the gun on himself.

French Envoy Sends Medal To Yorktown

To Commemorate Celebrations on Anniversary of Lafayette's Death.

Yorktown, Va., Dec. 3 (AP).—The Colonial National Monument committee today had received from the French government, through Ambassador De Laboulaye, a medal commemorating the celebrations held in 1934 in the United States and France for the 100th anniversary of the death of Gen. Lafayette.

Joining the celebration on October 19 at the monument, the citizens of Yorktown, Daughters of the American Revolution, Sons of the American Revolution and the College of William and Mary held special exercises on the anniversary of Lafayette's death, in conjunction with the celebration of the anniversary of the victory at Yorktown, in which Lafayette participated.

M. Laboulaye said in part, in a letetr accompanying the medal: "It occurred to me that owing to the important part taken on the 18th and 19th of October last by the Colonial National Monument committee, in the centennial celebrations, it would be appropriate to have a copy of this medal deposited either in the Moore House or in any of the official buildings of the Yorktown battlefields which has been in the past, and will be in the future, visited by many of my countrymen interested in the memories of Franco-American coopertion."

The medal was struck by the mint of Paris.

As Flood Waters Roared Yesterday Over Great Falls

The camera was pointed at the place where Great Falls should be. The flooded Potomac had no respect for the name and made a yellow roaring rapids, with no falls in sight. Only the black rock tips in the center serve to show that to the right and left are the places where the water used to take its tumble.

pressed White House opinion that some way should be found to increase annual earnings of the workers. Mr. Roosevelt feels it is poor policy to pay workers high daily wage rates but employ them so irregularly they only make $800 or $900 a year.

Asked about a midsummer prediction that business would pick up this fall, Henderson declared NRA records showed general improvement recently in production by the heavy goods and cotton textile industries. He added he expected the trend to continue upward.

Meanwhile, Clay Williams, board chairman, announced he hoped the new Congress in revising the recovery act would retain provisions calling for limitation of hours and payment of minimum wages by all trades. He indorsed Section 7(a), the collective bargaining guarantee, but declined to discuss the principle of majority rule in selection of representatives to speak for the workers in negotiations with employers.

Officials revealed Mr. Williams, Sidney Hillman, another NRA board member, and Linton Collins, a division administrator, had been chosen to ask the Federal Emergency Relief Administration to remove all prison-made clothing from the open market by purchasing it for distribution among the needy, as recommended by a special NRA committee, headed by Joseph N. Ulman, of Baltimore.

Williams explained the board would seek additional data on a proposal of the committee for a $50,000,000 PWA appropriation to take penitentiary factories out of competition with private business.

Hillman praised the committee's recommendations as likely to solve a problem "which has harassed the cotton textile industry for 75 years."

New Sheriff Appoints Deputies for County

Westminster, Md., Dec. 3 (Spl.). John A. Shipley, who assumed office as sheriff of Carroll County Saturday, announced appointments of several deputy sheriffs today.

In addition to Robert Pickett, of Sykesville, who was named chief deputy sheriff, the following officers have been appointed: Walter Blizzard, Sykesville; Emory Hahn, Taneytown; Israel Rinehart, Union Bridge, and Walter Shipley, Westminster. B. C. Mason, State officer, stationed at Westminster, was also commissioned a deputy sheriff.

Youth Dies In Flood.

The flood death was that of Billy Carter, 21, of Lynchburg, Va., who was found in Cub Run near Shenandoah, Va. His companions at a nearby Civilian Conservation Camp reported that he attempted to wade the high stream in the dark.

The heavy currents in the mouth of the flood-laden Susquehanna River impeded the search for A. Ross Gary, 17, and Henry Porter, 51, duck hunters, missing in Chesapeake Bay. Airplanes and a fleet of boats, including Coast Guard, Navy and private vessels, were combing the bay.

On Sunday, overcoats, hats and decoys used by the pair were washed ashore near Havre de Grace, Md. Their rowboat was found near the duckblind at which they were supposed to be shooting. Relatives still cling to the hope they will be found alive.

6 Feet Above Normal.

The high-water peak at Key Bridge was 6 feet 2 inches above normal at high tide yesterday morning. At high tide in the afternoon the freshet had fallen considerably and the mark was several inches less.

Harrisonburg suffered heavily from the Shenandoah. It was estimated $10,000 would be needed to repair the 200-foot section of the hydroelectric dam which was washed out Saturday.

Repair crews at Elkton, Va., had the Chesapeake-Western Railway bridge back in service after working all night. The foundations had been washed out.

In the Shenandoah Valley region the highest water mark since 1924 was reported. The south fork of the Shenandoah was over its banks at Riverton, inundating hundreds of acres of bottom land to a depth of 10 feet.

18 Feet at Strasburg.

On the north fork similar damage was done between Newmarket and Shenandoah. Bridges on a number of secondary roads were washed away. An 18-foot stage was reported at Strasburg.

Damage in Maryland was heaviest in the Middletown Valley. There, Catoctin Creek inundated a 25-mile strip from Wolfsville to Lander. Yesterday the State road between Wolfsville and Middletown was reported "passable with caution."

The road from Thurmont to Sabillasville was washed. Three bridges were swept away—one near Jerusalem, another near Foxville and the third near Catoctin Manor. It was estimated several weeks would be needed to repair the Catoctin Manor road.

Easing of Business Tax Is Considered take suitable steps to ease the blow, he said.

The suggestion is slated for further discussion at additional conferences today.

Chairman Hill disclosed that the Treasury for some time has been studying dealings of nonresident aliens on stock and commodity exchanges, to determine whether the capital gains tax should be imposed.

They found that the tax is consistently misunderstood by foreign investors, most of whom do not have a corresponding tax in the laws of their own lands. Inquiries further disclosed that many hedging operations are conducted by foreign business men, where the profit is apparent rather than real.

Cites Business Loss.

"It is understood that our brokers and others dealing with these foreign interests are losing a substantial amount of business on account of the fear on the part of such foreign interests of the imposition of the capital gains tax," Hill explained. "This is having an unfortunate effect on our markets."

Although the tax has been on the books for some years, it was learned that no attempt had been made to enforce it until the past year. Hill said he has not had an opportunity to go thoroughly into the proposal to repeal the tax, but has ordered an intensive committee study.

Transients Are Ordered To Stay Out of Florida

Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 3 (AP).—Notices warning transients to "stay out of Florida" were ordered posted in surrounding States today as Federal relief officials cut off funds used by the Florida Emergency Relief Administration transient division in expanding its faculties to take care of an increasing load. Immediate curtailment of the program was ordered by Henry Redkey, State transient director, after Washington officials told him they would attempt to "stem the flow to Florida."

Now folks who have been in tobacco all their lives, folks who grow it, know there is no substitute for mild ripe tobacco.

And down in the South where they grow tobacco and where they ought to know something about it—in most places Chesterfield is the largest-selling cigarette.

Advice From Japan.

If correctly quoted, the Japanese Minister of the Navy has sharply overreached his prerogative in asserting that any other power would be "ill-advised" to expand its fleet in the event that Tokyo decides to denounce the present limitation treaty. It is not within the competence of Admiral Osumi, or any other Japanese official, to say what constitutes good or ill advice in this matter.

Indeed the reaction of many will be that what this Japanese Minister thinks ill-advised may for that very reason be well-advised from the viewpoint of the nation—whatever it may be—which he presumes to instruct. Both Great Britain and the United States are amply competent to judge for themselves what alterations in their respective naval policies will be demanded by a more aggressive policy on the part of Japan. But it is not open to question that overthrow of the present treaty will necessitate some alteration.

This is not the only case recently in which prominent Japanese have been somewhat gratuitous in their advice to other countries. Ambassador Saito, in an interview given to the North American Newspaper Alliance, intimates that if this country does not recognize Manchukuo quickly, Great Britain is likely to take that action first. Here is a perfectly legitimate speculation. But, when made in the form of a newspaper interview by the Japanese Ambassador to this country, it smacks a little too strongly of extra-diplomatic pressure.

The American people have not forgotten that three years ago the suggestions of Japanese diplomats, as to the way others should regard their handling of the Manchurian dispute, turned out to be highly misleading. It is remembered, for instance, that at the outbreak of the trouble the Japanese government assured the world that "there never has been, and never will be, any question of the military occupation of Manchuria."

Since then there has been a tendency to interpret assurances from Japan in the opposite sense to that which the words are meant to convey. Such a tendency is more unfortunate than unnatural.

Logical Choice.

The appointment of Miss Katherine F. Lenroot, daughter of the late Senator Irvine Lenroot, of Wisconsin, as chief of the Children's Bureau in the Department of Labor, is more than just a reward of merit to an able woman in her twentieth year of service in this important division. It is also a gesture of appreciation of the work done by Miss Grace Abbott, for many years Miss Lenrott's chief.

Although one thinks first of the Children's Bureau in relation to the fight against child labor, its duties are many and varied. That it has serious and important work to do, even though child labor has been virtually abolished, is obvious to any one familiar with its activities in "all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life among all classes of our people."

Miss Lenroot is a career woman who knows intimately the aims and ideals of Grace Abbott. Her appointment is especially gratifying as an indication that the traditions which Miss Abbott so firmly established will continue to guide the Children's Bureau.

"A Defaulting Creditor."

Dr. Herbert F. Frazer, of the Trade Agreements Section of the State Department, uses a telling phrase in referring to the United States as a "defaulting creditor." It is an apt characterization of the type of delinquency of which this country has been guilty in dealings with foreign debtors. We have expended so much senseless eloquence, and wasted so much self-righteous indignation, upon the deficiencies of debtor states that it is well to emphasize our very definite responsibility in the issue.

In private transactions every intelligent lender understands the importance of maintaining the borrower's debt-paying capacity. The individual creditor is seldom so blind to his own interests as to undermine the earning power of the debtor.

But the greater complexity of international dealings appears to close the eyes of many to the inconsistency created when a creditor nation pursues trade policies that shut out the goods which constitute the chief means of payment between countries. The implications of such an exclusionist policy in our case were concealed from the superficial observer during the decade that followed the war only because American investors were then supplying foreign countries with funds that covered payments due on debts previously contracted.

To the discerning, the significance of our war-time change from debtor to creditor status was immediately apparent. It meant, in summary form, that we must eventually accept an equally fundamental alteration of our trade and tariff policies, or else let our foreign debts slide. We could not continue forever to lend foreigners the money with which to pay us for past loans.

Nevertheless, it has required a world-wide crisis and a collapse of the market for foreign loans to expose the flagrant incongruity of our attempts to collect while simultaneously placing barriers in the way of payment. At last we have acquired a better understanding of our "default" as a creditor, realizing the necessity of receiving a larger volume of imports in order to provide debtor countries with the funds for meeting debt charges.

That constitutes a first step toward the only theoretically sound, and therefore the only permanently satisfactory, solution of our international trade and related financial problems.

Debt And Deficit.

During the present fiscal year the net increase in the Federal debt has been slight, in spite of the heavy deficit already incurred since July 1. This is the case because the Treasury entered the period with an abnormally large cash balance, swollen by the proceeds of previous loans and profits from devaluation.

Now, however, cash on hand, exclusive of these profits, has fallen to about $745,000,000. With monthly deficits increasing and large relief outlays required during the winter months, the time has arrived for replenishing the depleted exchequer. Consequently, in addition to refunding $992,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness maturing on December 15, the Treasury proposes to ask for cash subscriptions to new offerings totaling $900,000,000.

With this accretion, the Federal debt will rise to more than $28,500,000,000. Moreover, even without an increase in the present scale of emergency spending, it is expected that further loans will be considered necessary by the middle of next March. If a program of work relief calling for additional billions of public money should be authorized, the debt may well exceed the figure of $31,000,000,000 which President Roosevelt estimated would be reached by the end of the present fiscal year.

The decision to offer long-term bonds having 18 years to run is considered surprising in view of the hesitating response of investors to the recent ten to twelve year offering. However, it is easy to understand why the Treasury wishes to place as large as possible a proportion of the debt in the form of bonds, since heavy and continued drafts upon the capital market will necessarily force it to rely chiefly upon short-term issues, placed with banks and institutional investors. Under such circumstances, neither low interest rates, nor the willingness of the Treasury to test investment sentiment for long-term offerings, can be regarded as an indication of the state of public credit.

Low interest rates are the result of the easy credit policies that have been pursued, and the absence of alternative investment openings. Indeed the abundant free resources of the banks provide virtually complete assurance that short-term offerings at least can be easily placed. The best gauge of the Government's credit, therefore, is found in the upward movement of the debt. So long as the budget remains unbalanced, with an expansion of uncovered emergency spending in prospect, the credit status of the Government will necessarily deteriorate, regardless of the character of the reception accorded new loan offerings.

New Policies Or New Faces?

In the course of a statement reiterating that he does not intend to resign as Republican national chairman, Mr. Henry P. Fletcher pertinently asks what is meant by the current clamor for "reorganization of the party."

Is the demand for a change in policy or in personnel or both? As he emphasizes, the advocates of reorganization are free to submit an alternative policy or set of principles to the rank and file of the party, or, more appropriately, to their representation in Congress. They are at full liberty, under party rules, to obtain the necessary signatures to a petition precipitating a meeting of the national committee for the purpose of electing new officers.

Mr. Borah and others who are appealing in the press for a reorganization appear to be talking about a change in personnel. Only by implication, not by definition, are they proposing new policies and principles. But what are to be the new policies and principles?

Until the reorganizers are more enlightening on this point they are open to the challenge that they have no new set of principles to offer. Furthermore, they are open to the suspicion, whether justified or not, that they are primarily engaged in a contest for control of the party machinery.

Washington's Bars.

The Bartenders Alliance has decided to ask Commissioner George E. Allen to make an investigatory tour of the bars of the District as a step toward elimination of the curious ruling which forbids the mixing of drinks in public. Several months ago the Commissioners were urged to inform themselves as to the sanitary shortcomings of the hidden bars. Although a public hearing was held, and much evidence piled up against the present hypocritical system, nothing was done about it. An atmosphere unpleasantly reminiscent of speakeasy days continues to be in force.

The arguments of the Bartenders Alliance are obviously sound. Its members point out that since drinking is legal, and liquor is openly displayed in store windows, there is no good reason why bartenders should be kept in hiding. Everybody knows that liquor is mixed into drinks. Yet for some elusive purpose this is made a clandestine operation, as if the existence of bartenders and mixing-bars were something of which to be ashamed. The Commissioners should rescind the hidden-bar edict. It serves no constructive purpose and is both deceitful and unhealthy.

Senator Nye's Objectives.

In reopening the Senate munitions investigation Senator Nye would be well-advised to drop his attitude of a prosecuting attorney in favor of one more calculated to find constructive solution for the evils which his committee has ably and properly spread before the public. Indeed, the measure of the Senator's statesmanship will be clearly depicted by his decision as to whether publicity or progress is the real goal of his work.

At the moment it seems that Mr. Nye is chiefly interested in the headlines. "We will attempt to show before Congress convenes," he says, "that munitions makers are responsible" for this, that and the other. The statement is naive and revealing. An investigation worthy of that name does not start out with a summary of its findings. It seeks all the facts—and then lets those facts speak for themselves.

Furthermore it appears that, in advance of completed testimony, Senator Nye has found a solution satisfactory to himself. "I intend personally to offer legislation to permit Government monopoly of the arms business," he says. "In my opinion that is the only effective way to end corruptive methods now employed by a majority in the industry." If he has already found the appropriate formula, what motive, other than publicity, is there in pursuing the investigation further?

As all close students of the private munitions problem know, Senator Nye is making a grave mistake by disregarding the advice of State Department experts and aligning himself with a method of control which is superficially attractive, but fundamentally full of the most serious flaws. We commend to his attention the article by Constance Drexel, a close student of fifteen years of patient effort in this field, which we print on the page opposite this today.

The Cost Of A "Full Life."

Dr. Mordecai Ezekiel, economic adviser for the Department of Agriculture, estimates that a family income of about $2,500 per year is required to provide a "moderately full life." The Brookings Institution estimates that in 1929, when the average level of income was much higher than today, 71 per cent of all families received less than that amount, and 60 per cent less than $2,000 per year, a sum covering only the basic necessities.

So long as such a large proportion of the people are compelled to limit their buying to articles of necessity, the possibility of expanding outlets for the many kinds of goods and services that are desirable but not absolutely essential is severely limited. Furthermore, as a result of the concentration of a large percentage of national income in the hands of a small proportion of very wealthy families, most of the saved income of the community is supplied by a relatively small number of individuals.

A more uniform distribution of income would undoubtedly lead to larger and more diversified buying of articles for immediate use and, as Dr. Ezekiel says, would mean a moderately full life for the millions who now possess little more than the necessities of existence. However, those who advocate a general leveling up or leveling down process for incomes as a means of raising the national standard of living are reminded by Dr. Ezekiel that it would still be necessary to divert a considerable part of our annual production to the creation of capital. Otherwise, the savings which are now furnished by the privileged groups, would be expended upon consumable goods and the capital outlays which enable a country to grow rich and prosper would be neglected.

Moreover, incomes expressed in dollars are highly variable quantities in terms of the goods and services which they buy. An inflationary expansion of our currency might put many times $2,500 at the disposal of everybody without adding anything to the well-being of the community. On the contrary, it might and probably would lead to progressive impoverishment of the majority of the people.

The problem of providing a fuller life for all is extremely complicated. More abundant living certainly can not be obtained by childish expedients to place more money at each man's disposal, nor will it be assured by dispossessing those who supply needed capital from saved incomes.

Governments And Reform.

(From the Christian Science Monitor.)

A recent interpreter of signs in Latin America has been more optimistic than helpful. That there has been a noteworthy improvement in the economic life of many Latin-American nations is beyond doubt, but it is doubtful that the resurgence of party strife and the downfall of coalition cabinets are proofs of that economic betterment. There is a curious divorce between economics and politics in Latin America, and, excepting in times of very profound stress, it is a gap which remains rather constant. * * * Though economic conditions affect the political situation, revival of opposition reveals rather failure of governments to bring about social and political reforms which have been demanded. The fault does not lie altogether with the governments concerned. Some of them have chosen to seek recovery first and reform second. But it is their failure in the latter which now puts the existence of their administrations in the balance.

A Bonus Compromise.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Senator Harrison's report of the Administration's compromise bonus plan doesn't jibe with the President's established attitude toward compromise. Generally he takes a positive stand. His desire to meet part way the wishes of these defenders of our liberty must be very great since he can not consent to go all the way.

It presents a tough problem—this plan—involving as it does the difficulty of segregating the really needy, the probability of graft-tainted selections, the lesser "pull" of the neediest and taking into account the present benefits from Federal relief.

Next comes the materialist who will argue that these two billions of dollars as a debt will operate as a reminder and warning of war, and a deterrent from both war and belligerent loans, of which there are already due us half a score more billions—uncollectible though it may be. GEORGE E. GARY.

Rome, Ga., Nov. 29.

From A Silverite.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Some financial writers and so-called economists who opposed the remonetization of silver, not by argument but by caustic remarks, such as "doing something for silver," will doubtless be interested to know that since Congress passed the silver purchase bill in June, the export trade of the United States has gradually increased.

The report of the United States Commerce Department for October shows that the exports totaled $206,353,000, the greatest volume for any month since April, 1931. This increased foreign trade gave the United States a favorable balance of $76,723,000 for October.

There must have been a reason for the increase, which is easily found in the fact that the silver purchase law placing silver at 50 cents an ounce almost doubled the commodity price of silver in India, China and South American countries. This enabled the people of those countries to buy more of the export products of the United States.

Further reports doubtless will show an even greater increase in the export trade, which means putting thousands of idle men formerly engaged in the manufacture of export goods back to work with wages and increased purchasing power.

When silver as a commodity gradually reaches the statutory price of $1.29 an ounce, there will ensue the greatest constructive prosperity in the United States, provided the Congress passes a central bank bill or one dominated by the Congress through a board of governors which will fix the interest rate and control the inflation or deflation of credit. Since, however, as above shown, the increased price of silver is responsible for the increase of the export trade it is the part of wisdom, in order to hasten prosperity, that Congress pass the Wheeler bill for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at nature's ratio—16 to 1—which will force France and the few remaining countries off the gold standard and result in a world bimetallic money agreement.

We Like Jordbkfning.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Again on November 27 The Post calls an earthquake (in other words an earth quake) a tremblor. Why? Is temblor any more expressive than earthquake? Could any word in any language be more expressive of an earth quake than earthquake? Then why borrow a Spanish word? Is it to show that The Post knows a Spanish word? If so, why don't you at least finish the word, which is temblor de tierra?

Perhaps you don't like English. If so, here are a few more translations of the simple English word earthquake: Erdbeben, tremblement de terre, aardbeving, crith-thalmhuinn, dorgis, cutremur de pament, terremuoto, tremor de terra, jordbkfning, and jishin. Take your choice and have a lot of fun.

Some day I am going to write to you about "replica" when you mean a copy; also "negotiate" when you mean surmount or traverse; and "alibi" when you don't mean alibi. There are others but I can't think of them just at this minute.

But I do like The Washington Post. C. B.

Washington.

News Is News.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Outside of the antics of the Washington police and "Bim Gump," the two greatest comic features of The Post are the news stories about the numbers racket and the "probe" of telephone rates. Why not put both on the same page with "Bennie?"

Could anything be funnier than the plea of well-meaning people to the papers to cooperate in doing away with the numbers racket by not printing racing results? What's the matter with all, or parts of, say the Weather Bureau report? I pause for the answer.

I do not think in the many, many improvements in your paper lately, you have been considerate in saving the "probe" of telephone rates until Christmas. The stories now even show that hotels are going to put in nickel slot booths. Here's a dollar to a dunking of corn pone that when they charge less than a dime from the room, they'll also serve breakfast free to $2.50 overnight guests.

Yes, there is a Santa Claus but we (some of us) wish The Post would wait until December 24 to tell us so. P. E. JACKSON.

Fashions in Verse.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: To judge from the variety of comment, your weekly poetry-revival column seems to be a success—a deserved success. But it falls short of what it ought to be if the idea is to encourage so-called modern poetry, as distinguished from the poetry our fathers and grandfathers enjoyed.

Fashions in the clothes we wear may be changed from time to time without serious misgivings in regard to the fashion plates of the future. Fashions in verse, such as free verse and the ingenious red-fingernail conceits of modern young ladies, should not necessarily make the judicious grieve.

To the judicious literary fan their delectable fragrance may furnish a suitable fillip in the modern hothouse of songs. But truly it does not jibe with a judicious view of temporal things to envisage the climax of poetical art in an anthology of brief rhymes a la mode.

Therefore, it is to be hoped that The Post will not continue to give an undue amount of space to the prevailing output of clever but sadly evanescent versicles.

And it is pleasing to note that in the poetry column of November 26, two poems which deserve a second reading—namely, "If I Were Young Again," by William Whitehead Hickey, and "River Song," by Mary A. Kiefer—are written in the old-fashioned sonnet form, recalling ox cart and spinning wheel if not psalmody days.

In this day of machinery, regimentation and tentative economics, the printing of such poems is much to be desired lest we forget the one grand fashion in poetry—the fashion which has been set by true poets, always fresh and proper from generation to generation. T. T.

For The Lepers.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I make an appeal to your readers for the destitute lepers in 188 colonies throughout the world? Through no fault of their own, they are suffering from a terrible disease that makes them outcasts. Every day little children become infected because a diseased parent is not properly cared for.

Money and bandages are needed. Any amount of money will be most gratefully accepted: $10 will often cure an early case, using the chaulmoogra oil treatment; $1 will provide food for a month; $2, a warm blanket.

Leper colonies can never have enough bandages. Tear old sheets, towels and napkins into strips 3 or 5 inches wide, roll and pin with a safety pin; or send any white material—except gauze—and the patients will make their own bandages. Women's clubs and societies for young people can do a noble work here which will cost them nothing.

Please send contributions, checks and money orders to the American Mission to Lepers, Inc., 156 Fifth avenue, Room 1118-P, New York, or to 77 W. Washington street, Chicago, Ill.

Gins to Brazil.

A few years ago this country was gripped with the fear that American manufacturers of machinery were selling their wares to the Soviet government of Russia, to be used against the United States in an effort to capture world markets. Experts in various lines who went to Russia to advise the government and show the Russians how to operate the machinery and how to manage were looked upon as little less than traitors by many Americans.

The five-year plan in Russia did not pan out very well, and the Soviet did not succeed in flooding the world markets with Soviet-produced goods, sold at cut-throat price levels. American fear of the sale of machinery to Russia has largely passed.

The sale of ginning machinery by a Texas firm to Brazil for use in ginning the Brazilian cotton crop may impress some people as being much of the same piece as selling machinery to Soviet Russia for possible use in capturing America's foreign markets. There is no doubt that this machinery going to Brazil will be turned against the United States eventually in price wars.

Shipping of ginning machinery to Brazil acts as a warning to the American cotton farmer to look out for increased competition from the great South American republic. Export records for cotton down there reveal that the cotton-growing business is picking up. The American cotton farmer, with his loan from the Government is, in many instances, "sitting pretty" right now, while the Government is advancing loans in an effort to peg the price. What he will do later when he discovers his cotton has not been moving into consumptive channels abroad, except in small way, remains to be seen.

That movement of machinery to Brazil is one of the most significant developments of the year in the world cotton situation.

The Post Impressionist

Are Readers Bovine?

Post Office, Tuesday.

HALF Washington patronizes those lending libraries, where you can, if in time, rent the latest books. Half Washington knows—by sight their typical attendants, low-voiced, soft-eyed, who appear to approve the patron's choice, no matter what that choice may be.

But not one-thousandth of Washington knows those attendants' real thoughts about the patrons.

Well, the Post-Impressionist does—now.

At least, we know one gentle attendant's thoughts. Part of her name is Sally. We won't tell the rest of it: we don't want to hurt her with the person she works for or the people she waits upon. But we asked her to record her impressions of the "customers," to set her thoughts down helter-skelter, just as they came to her, during an easy day.

And this is the record.

"There's certainly a likeness," Sally writes, "between the docility of the domesticated milk giver and the run-of-the-mill book renter. Both may be led, without a great show of force, to any given grazing ground. . . .

"Of course, I have to allow for occasional balkings—for sporadic impulses to wander untrammeled in thorny bypaths. Just as Bossie, the cowlet, may whimsically flick her tail at the morning's usual rations—moo plaintively for figs and cheese cake—so Belle or Bobbie may occasionally sneer at their befitting Kathleen Norris and Zane Grey and reach for a Woolcott.

"But it doesn't last.

"Stenographers, f'r instance: While they, as a group, read Baldwin, Ayres, Larrimore, the sleekly ultra ones will yen on a Tuesday for Thorne Smith. However, by Friday they're back for a Beth Brown or Albert Halper.

"And a little diplomatic persuasion helps lots. . . .

"Do customers read to collect new thoughts and theories?

"What certain publishers' blurbs really say is: 'Attempt no more to think for yourself, thus unnecessarily inducing brain fag. Let us prescribe something painless and modern.' For a while they lull Bossie.

"But then she wakes up and screams. . . .

"Popular publishers take for granted their public's power of comprehension and assimilation. But their blurbs' sales copy is carefully tested to fit the readers' minimum of ignorance, knowledge or gullibility.

"Bless the reader!

"'Here's a nice dose, a brand-new bright-jacketed best seller. Take it, my good fellow—stout fellow!'

"Do you know when you are duped?

"Adventure, Mystery, Love, Biography, Nonfiction: These are the listings of the material in the lending library you frequent. How do you pick 'em—when we don't extend the helping hand?

"Your fellow worker, Miss Blondine, or your boy friend, Danny, or your landlady, Miss Whasername, has mentioned the merits of this fine book. So you know you just must read the thing. You rush to your rental-lib for it—between gulping coffee and punching the clock. The saccharine-voiced 'assistant' (that's me) says:

"'So sorry. It's out just now. But here is another very popular best seller . . . Hard for me to keep from rereading it.'

"Do you wait until the originally desired volume may be procured?

"Oh, no! You take the substitute—a book—some book—any book!

"Don't blame the library assistant. She must live—even as the author. Blame yourself. You should have second and third choices at your tongue's end.

"After all, what's about your moo, dear cow, that a specific book should be held until you hear of it?

"How are you, customer, affected by the books you rent—and read? You don't wonder about us 'assistants?' Well, we do wonder about you.

"What's your reaction—if any—to 'Lust for Life'—'Challenge to Liberty'—'So Red the Rose,' which paces 'Anthony' in popularity? . . .

"Admonish yourself, dear Bossy. Learn to read with an elastic eyebrow ready to rise in incredulity.

"Do you know when you have been duped by the blurbers—or us?

"Mebbie you are lawful prey for those Books One Should Read lists. . . . If you're satisfied, I am. . . . But why not make out your own lists? . . . There you go, being bovine! Why dontcha pick a pasture of your own? Haven't you any hobby?

"You may, of course, be bereft of time to pore and sift. Busy, restless, huh? Well, then, take this from me: Never persevere after you're bored. At least you can dispose of a book much easier than you can kill a lecturer."

All this is Sally speaking, understand. Don't ask the Post-Impressionist what he thinks. He thinks soft-eyed Sally's a hussy.

State Ownership Not Arms Problem Remedy

Informed Opinion Favors International Regulation of Industry, Says Observer.

By Constance Drexel.

EXPLANATION is needed for the apparent volte-face of many who have been advocating the suppression of the private manufacture of arms and munitions. From that position, still held by Senator Nye, most informed opinion has swung to favor a strict governmental national and international supervision, as incorporated in the recent American proposals to the Disarmament Conference at Geneva. That such a change in enlightened opinion has taken place is an undisputed fact. What are the reasons for this evolution in thought?

The first reason is that dictatorships have seized power in many countries during the period in which this question has been discussed at Geneva. And those who have watched the battle for and against disarmament all these years, have come to the conclusion that government-owned and operated armament plants could be swung into war or into huge preparedness programs even more easily than those privately operated.

As for the opinion that government ownership would more easily stop the international traffic in arms, have we not recently witnessed a series of shipments across frontiers, either to foreign governments or to revolutionary groups in those countries, for which governments both democratic and dictatorial were directly responsible?

TO those seeking truth instead of headlines, it has been increasingly evident that, should the situation be left as it is, without a system of licenses and publicity and other checks and counter checks proposed in the American plan at Geneva—government ownership of munition plants could become a menace far greater to the world than the present situation.

Indeed, we have some of the realists at Geneva to thank for pounding that fact into the heads of the idealists. If there has been no official marriage such as government ownership would mean, the existing relations between government and munition makers are just about as close. If the American proposals are carried out those secret relations will be brought to light, not only in this country but all over the world.

For the first time, under the State Department plan, the people who must pay the cost of war and preparedness for war will have a chance of getting at the truth, in part at least, of where all these weapons of destruction are being manufactured, what they are, and where they are being sent. And they will get those facts before armed conflicts are started.

In favor of government ownership and operation, it is held that not merely individual profits, but also graft and bribes might thus be more easily curtailed. There again those who have followed this disarmament problem from all its angles at Geneva feel that the size of the "profits" of private manufacture which this country is so emotionally excited about is of comparatively slight importance one way or another in the staggering burden of the existing system of war and preparedness for war. Nor do these profits greatly affect the stupendous moral responsibilities involved in the avowed purpose of bringing wholesale death and destruction to others besides ourselves.

This does not mean that the Senate's investigation into the munitions industries should not continue. The debunking process must go on; the motives hiding behind so-called patriotism, national honor and national defense must be brought to light.

• • • •

ANOTHER reason which has caused former partisans of government ownership of arms and munitions industries to change their minds is the real possibility that the suppression of private manufacture would cause State munition plants to spring up where they never grew before. It has been learned that the theory of nationalization, og government ownership, can really be worked for the greater profit of the industries manufacturing weapons of death and destruction, and to the detriment of the peace and prosperity of the rest of the world.

Yes, though the theory is still advocated by Left parties and important veterans organizations in France and by the Labor Party in England, in the light of the experience of the past 15 years, official thought at Geneva has changed its mind.

Better to understand a situation into which, after many years of fruitless efforts, the manufacture and traffic of weapons and munitions of war has been thrust with considerable force by the Senate's inquiry into the subject, it is necessary to start the story with the close of the World War.

In the original plan for the League of Nations, accepted by President Wilson from a draft approved by Col. House for the United States and Lord Robert Cecil for Great Britain, in July, 1918, after requiring "that national armaments shall be reduced to the lowest point consistent with safety," and instructing delegates to "formulate at once a plan by which such a reduction may be brought about," it was planned to have this article:

"The contracting powers agree that munitions and implements of war shall not be manufactured by private enterprise and that publicity as to all national armaments and programs is essential."

• • • •

THOUGH the suppression of private manufacture was not carried into the Covenant of the league agree that the manufacturers the peace conference, in Part 5 of Article VIII, the "members of the league agree that the manufacture by private enterprise of munitions and implements of war is open to grave objections," and the council is to advise them how the "evil effects attendant upon such manufacture can be prevented."

And, though ignored in America, valiant efforts were made at Geneva to find a way out. A temporary mixed commission on armaments carried on an investigation of its own and reported to the league assembly on September 15, 1921, that Armament firms have attempted to bribe government officials both at home and abroad.

Armament firms have disseminated false reports concerning the military and naval programs of various countries in order to stimulate armament expenditures.

Armament firms have sought to influence public opinion through the control of newspapers in their own and foreign countries.

Armament firms have organized international armament rings through which the armament race has been accentuated by playing off one country against another.

Armament firms have organized international armament trusts which have increased the price of armaments sold to governments.

• • • •

THESE scandals sound ominously like the ones being unearthed in the Senate's investigation. For that matter, way back in ancient Greece, 500 years before Christ, according to Aristophanes, peace efforts between Athens and her neighbors were blocked by the armament makers and merchants of the period.

No wonder, then, that the scrapping of the suppression of private manufacture as a remedy seems at first glance only to add more confusion to a hopeless muddle.

But not in reality. It merely means that humanity moves but slowly to its goal. It has taken 15 years of discussions at Geneva, pro and con, to discover that government ownership can not in itself bring a cure. A national and international control, which will finally throw a searchlight of pitiless publicity into the manufacture and sale of these weapons of destruction, now has the endorsement of all realistic students of the problem.

Greater Funds Asked by Police

West Virginia Chief Seeks $600,000 to Provide 24-Hour Service.

Charleston, W. Va., Dec. 3 (Spl.). Recommendation for doubling the present State police and for a legislative appropriation twice the present allowance to be met by the issuance of annual drivers' permits are made in the biennial report of P. D. Shingleton, superintendent of the State department of public safety, to Gov. H. G. Kump.

At present, West Virginia licenses its automobile drivers under perpetual permits. Shingleton declares his department wants to give the people of the State a continuous 24-hour police service daily instead of the present schedule of 16 to 18 hours. The increased legislative appropriation asked is $600,000 as against the present allowance of $300,000.

Monopoly

ONE worry which his illustrious kinsman had and which doesn't seem to worry Mr. Franklin Roosevelt was monopoly.

BARGERON

Instead of it being a worry to the present Mr. Roosevelt, in fact he encouraged it through his NRA on the old Bull Moose theory that if you can't break monopoly up the best thing to do is to control it. But strangely enough there is one monopoly which Mr. Roosevelt seems entirely to have overlooked. He is applying neither the old Democratic treatment nor the new NRA treatment to it. And that is the monopoly of Mr. Ickes. No effort has been made to break him up and none has been made to control him. He operates without a code and unquestionably in restraint of New Deal trade. What it takes to crush the rival businesses he does. As a juggernaut our old monopolists were mild in comparison.

• • • •

His latest undertaking in this respect was to put the Federal Housing Administration on the bum. There seems little doubt now that his plan for low-cost housing will be adopted and by low-cost housing it is chiefly meant Government money at around 3 per cent.

Whether the Housing Administration would have been successful in reviving heavy industries is, of course, not known. But it is a fact that business took to it more enthusiastically than it has taken to any of the present Administration's numerous plans. It would take a most unusual optimist to expect it to be successful against the Ickes scheme. The average man would not be likely to build a large house on FHA money at 5½ per cent when Mr. Ickes will build a small one with money at 3 per cent. The logical thing for a man wanting a more pretentious home would be to build two small homes or three or four of them and subsequently join them together.

Indeed, the Administration now seems to have given up the hope of convincing anybody that there is no conflict between the two plans. They seem instead to be putting out the idea now that "well, the FHA wouldn't have worked anyway." Not enough purchasing power to carry the FHA plan—this is the new thought.

Whether it is sound or not, it is a fact that it wasn't entertained until Mr. Ickes broke loose. Just where he was when the FHA was being set up is not known. He must not have been consulted because surely he would have spoken up and showed how it wouldn't work.

Well, most authorities agree that it won't work now. It is doubtful if anything will ever work which threatens Mr. Ickes' place in the sun unless he is put under a code.

• • • •

The question is, also, how many other New Deal agencies will survive him. A lot of them have as their purpose the raising of values so people can pay off their debts with the same dollar with which they incurred them. Mr. Ickes' manifest purpose is to run values down.

It is funny that with all of our regulatory and coordinating agencies that none of them seem to be able to do anything to dampen the zeal of this man. There is the NRA to permit monopolies and the Federal Trade Commission to prevent them. And there are our coordinating agencies topped by the super coordinator, Mr. Richberg. But they don't touch Mr. Ickes. With his large espionage corps he has built up a government of his own.

If Mr. Roosevelt should ever adopt the big stick of T. R. what a place he would have to wield it.

No End of Books

All-Fiction, From War-Time Intrigue to Hearty Days Down on the Farm.

By Theodore Hall.

Herbert Gorman put the behind-the-scenes intrigue of the Franco-Prussian War into his novel, "Jonathan Bishop," last year. Now he does the same thing with the World War, carrying on some of the blood-lines of his earlier characters and summing up many a train of action which began 40 years before, in his latest novel, "Suzy" (Farrar & Rinehart, $2.50).

In London, just before the war, Suzy's humdrum life touches the drama of the German Secret Service. Later a dancer in Paris, adored by everyone from newspapermen to diplomats, Suzy is thrown into the midst of a whirlpool of espionage and intrigue. To balance the melodrama and perhaps to make it more plausible, Mr. Gorman paints war-time scenes as carefully as an historian. He even brings actual figures onto his pages, from Mata Hari to Anatole France and Marcel Proust. "Suzy" stands as one of the most exciting of historical novels, marvelously complex and high-colored.

• • • •

One aspect of war on this side of the Atlantic has seldom been used in fiction—the lot of the conscientious objector. Hector Lazo's "Taps" (Bruce Humphries, $1.25) makes a sharply telling story on that theme Gordon Mason, young campus hero, who is about to enlist during the patriotic frenzy of April, 1917, astounds his family and friends by turning objector. In the midst of the commotion he is drafted, sent to camp, and then segregated with the other objectors. Inside the plot, we are allowed to see that Mason has been asked by the War Department to play this role in order to watch a suspected spy. But when Mason is about to be congratulated by his superior on his success, it turns out that his real opinions are now against war. An ironic turn of fate brings the novelette to a close.

Mr. Lazo, an official in the NRA here, has made of this rather trick plot a story very moving indeed.

"The Crowded Hill," by LeRoy MacLeod (Reynal & Hitchcock, $2.50). In a farm house in the Wabash Valley; time, 1876-78, live two very spirited families. Of their conflict, and of an era not unlike our own, the author of "The Years of Peace" writes with the sharpest of eyes on human nature.

• • • •

"Plowing on Sunday," by Sterling North (Macmillan, $2.50). Also for those who like the bucolic is this full-blooded tale of a farmer in Wisconsin, who held his land, wheat and hogs as the apple of his eye. Here is the countryside in its happiest, heartiest guise, pictured with homesickness for the placid days of 1913 just before the eruption.

• • • •

"Little Orvie," by Booth Tarkington (Doubleday, Doran, $2.50). Gorgeously funny adventures of a little boy going on 8. Mr. Tarkington has now covered the three ages of boyhood—"Little Orvie" ranks with "Penrod" and "Seventeen" as a picture which the less gentle sex will recognize with chuckles.

• • • •

"The Proud Servant," by Margaret Irwin (Harcourt Brace, $2.50). John Buchan's biography of Montrose went straight to Miss Irwin's head. Now she gives us a reconstruction in fiction, finely imaginative and impassioned, of Scotland's most romantic hero—James Graham, first Marquis of Montrose, who as Charles I's Lord Lieutenant of Scotland gained that country for the crown for one brief year, 1644-45. A splendidly written piece of work which must stand beside Buchan.

• • • •

"Joseph: the Husband of Mary," by Hiram Graham (Yorktown Press, N. Y., $2.50). A reverent but non-religious novel about Joseph, the Carpenter, which recreates a whole, far scene. Very ably done.

• • • •

"Patterns of Wolfpen," by Harlan Hatcher (Bobbs-Merrill, $2.50). A country paradise in the Kentucky of 1885-87, gradually spoiled by industry's black hand. Amiable and striking characters make the situation the more poignant. Here is a choice chapter of Americana, beautifully written.

• • • •

"Fortune's Wheel," by Agnes Louise Provost (Macrae-Smith, $2). Her worthless husband, thought dead, comes back to the scene to complicate the heroine's Western romance.

• • • •

"Courage in Her Pocket," by Janice Longley (Macrae-Smith, $2). Sudden success on Broadway for the Texan young lady, who doesn't like New York even then until the right man comes along.

• • • •

"Whispering Range," by Tom Roan (King, $2). Cowmen and sheepmen fight it out in the modern West.

• • • •

The two latest reprints in the Modern Library edition ($.95) are "Porgy" and "Maria Chapdelaine."

The first is Dubose Heyward's well-known novel of Negro life in Charleston, a novel almost as famous in 1925 as is a certain work today by Mr. Heyward's one-time collaborator in a book of poetry, Hervey Allen.

The second is perhaps the finest novel ever written about modern French-Canadian life. Its author, Louis Hemon (1880-1913), wandered from Paris to the Province of Quebec, and there lost his life by a railroad accident. But this eloquent story of Maria and her countrymen makes Hemon's fame secure.

Frostburg Man Picked For $100,000 Dam

Frostburg, Md., Dec. 3 (Spl.). Max Mathias, former city engineer, has been appointed resident engineer of the Piney Run Dam project by the mayor and city commissioners. The appointment is subject to approval by Whitman, Requardt & Smith, consulting engineers of Baltimore, who made the plans and specifications and will supervise the construction work, which will be done by George F. Hazelwood, Cumberland. The dam is one of the largest PWA projects in this section, involving the expenditure of approximately $100,000.

Two other local men applied for the position of resident engineer—S. Graff Haverstick and Joseph James. City Clerk Roland Lammert informed city officials that only two were eligible, as Mr. James was the city engineer and could not be accepted.

D'Oyly Carte

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

IT is my conviction that one of the best things that has happened in many years is the visit to the United States of the D'Oyly Carte Gilbert and Sullivan Opera Company. These distinguished artists have done more to increase and to cement good fellowship between America and Great Britain than almost any other agency. They did not know when they planned this excursion whether it would be successful or not; they knew that our country was the home of jazz and of musical comedy; they were not at all certain that light operas more than 50 years old, given without any changes or any concessions to what is supposed to be contemporary taste would be received with enthusiasm.

• • • •

The fact is that the productions by this company have been and are the most successful entertainments in New York; the house is sold out for every performance, the stay in our metropolis has already been prolonged a month longer than was advertised originally; and it looks as if they might go on for two or three years if they wished.

The result is that all these British singers love Americans as they never loved them before; and on the other hand, Americans are so delighted with the presentation of these operatic masterpieces and with the exquisite art displayed by the troupe from across the sea, that we have an affection for these singers and musicians that can not be cooled or diminished by time.

The wit and humor of Gilbert, the lovely melodies of Sullivan, have been a fresh revelation; it is not too much to say they have helped to educate us in appreciation of the higher form of entertainment. Light opera, as exhibited by this company, is funnier than musical comedy and far more fascinating than jazz.

• • • •

It would be a serious error to suppose that in the history of music these delightful comic operas take a secondary place. Sir Arthur Sullivan is the greatest musical composer in the history of Great Britain. His works are masterpieces.

We shall continue to talk about these performances long after the company have returned to their native land; and it is certain that in their native land they will have only the most enthusiastic and most affectionate expressions in talking about Americans.

Charlottesville Begins Tuberculosis Drive

Charlottesville, Va., Dec. 3 (Spl.). The annual appeal of the local Tuberculosis Association, through the sale of its Christmas seals, is being conducted here under the direction of Edwin Lee.

There are 202 persons with active tuberculosis in Charlottesville and Albemarle County, half of whom are in poverty.

Local physicians, the staff of the Blue Ridge Sanatorium, the University of Virginia Hospital, and the health department have located these cases, only 16 of which have been placed in sanatoria. The others must be cared for in their homes, with every effort being made to prevent spread of the disease.

Atlanta Council Beats Liquor Store Plan

Atlanta, Dec. 3 (AP).—The Atlanta city council today defeated by a vote of 27 to 9 a proposal for the operation by the city of a liquor store.

The proposal was in the form of a resolution which would "authorize and empower in the name of the City of Atlanta," the mayor, James L. Key, to take such steps as necessary to secure and put into operation a municipal liquor store, the proceeds to be used for the benefit of the municipality.

What Would Borah's Elephant Look Like?

Election Victim Remains in Extremis as G. O. P. Doctors Debate Remedies.

By Elliott Thurston.

FERMENT within the Republican party over reorganization goes to show that what some hasty coroners lately mistook for rigor mortis was merely suspended animation. Nevertheless, such respiration as is perceptible so far seems largely artificial. The chief question appears to be whether the victim of the last two elections needs resuscitation or reincarnation.

Dr. Borah is, and always has been, a reincarnationist. So are most of the other Progressives—or Insurgents. Not Dr. Norris, however, who long since abandoned hope for reincarnation or interest in resuscitation. Drs. Fletcher, Hilles and sundry others who have been prescribing for the patient right along, are content with their treatment. They continue to believe in resuscitation.

To those of the laity who try to look on with a certain dispassionate interest, the trouble with all of the attending doctors is that all of them offer remedies and none has a cure. Some of them think the victim should change his name and start life all over again. Others are of the opinion that the old name can be reinvested with its former prestige. The contest between Drs. Borah and Hilles is merely one as to which set of salvationists shall prescribe the treatment. Dr. Borah's treatment is labeled "liberalization." Dr. Hilles stands by the conservative dosages to which the patient's system has long been adjusted.

SHORT of reincarnation, Mr. Borah might be satisfied with a major operation if it succeeded in changing the entire personality of the patient. Dr. Hilles is convinced that the old, familiar personality may yet prove capable of coping with affairs in this changing world. Certainly if the nature of the elephant is to be transformed nothing short of a major operation can do it. Not only must the old veterinarians be run off the ranch, which is no slight task in itself, but the surgery is bound to be drastic—and precarious.

What is the elephant going to look like when Dr. Borah gets through with the operation—if not reincarnation? Neither now nor at any time in the past has Dr. Borah precisely delineated the features of the remodeled or reincarnated entity for which he has yearned for many years. It is all very well to say that the elephant is to be liberalized—but liberalized into what? What will his nature then be? Again, it hardly seems adequate to say that he will then be liberal, or progressive, or modernized, or in tune with the times. Just what do these words mean?

To attempt to make the elephant into a mere imitation of the Democratic donkey scarcely seems in order. Or is it to become a wilder beast? Or should it remain very much tamer. Manifestly it would seem that there must be a contrast offered, and a sharp contrast if a fickle public is to be asked to make a choice. Yet the more the subject is studied the more difficult it is to decide what contrast should or can be offered.

• • • •

NOT the least of the difficulties, as has been emphasized before in this space, is that the New Deal presents an ever-changing contour and aspect. Just when its rivals imagine that it is beginning to jell, to take shape, substance and form—just as they bring up their guns and get them trained on what they think they see—they discover that they have been focusing on a mirage or an illusion. The erstwhile donkey seems to have been metamorphosed into a chameleon. At one moment its color seems to be reddish, and scarcely a second later the color fades into staid, conservative tones. This is a phenomenon new to American politics. It still has most of the country completely baffled.

How, then, does one go about producing a contrast, save by adopting deeper coloring at one end or the other of the spectrum? Yet the New Deal is kaleidoscopic. Almost any coloring adopted will find a counterpart in the New Deal, which possesses the heretofore unheard-of political gift of being able to suffuse itself overnight with whatever shade seems to be the most popular at the moment, or the most likely to be taken on by an ambitious rival. Not only has the donkey, whose habits and nature were once fairly well understood, acquired the characteristics of the chameleon, but it has even learned to perform at convenient moments the bewildering trick of invisibility. Mr. Sinclair found that out. So did Senator Cutting.

Until the competing veterinarians in the Republican circus can make up their minds as to what they want to make a beaten and baffled elephant into, the interested if not innocent bystander will remain skeptical. No doubt the first step in resuscitation or reincarnation is to agree on which doctors or magicians to employ. Yet those who retain a traditional or sentimental interest in the elephant can not be blamed for asking what he is going to be like when the doctors get through with him. After all, to many of them a fond memory is preferable to a monstrosity.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

LORD JIM.

(Lord Jim, the colt sold at the Old Glory auction in 1932 for $575, and which won the Hambletonian this summer, was knocked down at the same auction last week. Representatives of foreign interests ran the bidding up, but Lord Jim was bought in for $8,100 by Dr. Ogden M. Edwards, jr., owner of Walnut Hall Farm, which bred the colt. He will be retired.)

"Lord Jim!" • • •
A rustle sweeps the auction mart—
A silence falls upon the heavy air;
A flashing bay, his classic head held high,
Whinnies and wonders at the action there.

Within the depths of mem'ry something stirs,
These men? • • • these lights? • • •
that ruddy auctioneer? • • •
That hammer falling like a bullet's crack? • • •
Yes Jim, you knew all this another year.

You quivered there in nineteen-thirty-two—
You saw this scene and heard the hammer fall;
But that was not like this; no buzzing throng
Crowded about and followed from your stall.

Then you were just a colt, untried, unknown,
A little scrawny; awkward, too, some said;
Another colt, yes, just another one,
And there were others finer, better bred.
"Who'll start him? Give a hundred?" barked that voice
That you recall on hearing it today;
Reluctant were the bidders, slow the bids—
There was no rush to lead Lord Jim away.

• • • •

And now you stand in that same ring again—
But two short years have joined time's speedy flight;
The name Lord Jim tops all the others now,
For yours is fame that flashes through the night.

The richest prize for 3-year-olds took—
Your heart and speed upon an August day
Stirred thousands as you gave your dust to kings
And queens of turfdom, gallant, speedy bay!

What value will they place upon you now?
What are you doing here upon the block?
Where is this thing called sentiment? Or does
It stand aside while bargain seekers mock?

The Germans bid to take you overseas,
The French and British, too, could use you there;
The highest bidder gets you on this day—
You know not what your future is nor where.

• • • •

You hear the modest figures, see the nods;
And as the hammer falls and breaks the spell
You see an old familiar friend approach
And now you know, Lord Jim, that all is well.

To Walnut Hall where you were born you go—
Back to the fields where first you romped, my lad!
Back to your old Kentucky home, you're bound

Political Help.

When I was young I used to think, when things were badly on the blink, if we elected Jim or Jack, prosperity would soon come back. In those glad days I used to feel a sort of wild and frenzied zeal, and I'd forget to eat my grub, and stand upon a box or tub, and boost my favored candidate as being truly good and great. I had delusions in my head, and I believed the things I said. Sometimes my candidate would win, and I would say, with hopeful grin, "We now shall leave the old time groove, and all conditions will improve." And, having fantods in my brain, I thought my bughouse hopes were sane. But things were always getting worse, prosperity was in the hearse; the man for whom I'd rooted well gave forth an ancient, fish-like smell, and showed his only hope and care was to annex a double share of any spoils which were in sight, regardless of the wrong or right. Now that I'm old I sadly smile when politicians climb my stile and tell what wonders they'll perform if they can keep an office warm. This is a weary world of grief and politics gives no relief; the graft we know as politics is full of scurvy snares and tricks, and each man rustles for himself to gather in the spoils and pelf. The statesman doesn't care a whoop if weary voters wilt and droop; the only time he cares a groat is when he asks them for their vote. We must upon ourselves depend if we would from the hole ascend; we have to use whatever brains were given to poor locoed swains, and let the candidates go hang, with all their eloquent harangue.

Debut Made By 70 Girls At 'German'

Cotillion Held in Old Lyric Opera House in Baltimore.

John P. Hills Entertain for Three Capital Debutantes.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

More than 70 debutantes made their bow at the first german of the Bachelors' Cotillion in Baltimore last night which was held in the old Lyric Opera House.

The cotillion is one of the few really old organizations of its kind which has kept up the traditions of past years, and it is a signal honor for debutantes other than those who belong to the cream of Baltimore society to be invited.

Numerous dinners were given in Baltimore at various clubs and in private homes. Among the hosts were former Representative and Mrs. John Phillip Hill, who entertained at their home in Baltimore for three of the debutantes of this season from Washington. They are Miss Christine Long, daughter of the United States Ambassador to Italy and Mrs. Breckenridge Long; Miss Marianna Dunn, daughter of the chief of protocol division of the State Department, and Mrs. James Clement Dunn, and Miss Stellita Stapleton, daughter of Mrs. Daniel C. Stapleton.

Mr. and Mrs. Hill make their home in Washington, but keep their former home open and ready for occupancy all winter, for they spend much time there. Their daughter, Miss Suzanne Hill, who was a debutante last season, entertains there from time to time preceding balls and dances.

Lyric a Blaze of Lights.

The old Lyric was a blaze of lights and color, with brilliant masses of flowers which had been sent to the debutantes piled high in the boxes adding to the decorations, and bright frocks of the debutantes and their chaperones and the dignified black and white of the men's clothes.

Miss Long wore a gown of pale peach-colored chiffon trimmed at the shoulders and hemline with dark-brown feathers. It was the same frock which she wore at the reception given for her, by her parents, Sunday afternoon at Grasslands, and is vastly becoming to her blonde coloring.

Miss Dunn wore a frock of shimmering white satin which set off her dark hair, and Miss Stapleton wore the lovely frock of blush lace and chiffon trimmed with clusters of ermine taile and tiny gardenias which she wore at her Washington debut Thanksgiving Day.

Other debutantes who went from Washington last night were Miss Anne Powell Potts and her sister, Miss Helen Caldwell Potts, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Potts, of Frederick, Md., who wore, respectively, turquoise blue pebble crepe fashioned on long lines with an off-the-shoulder decolletage, and a gown of white moss crepe with a jacket of white feathers. They both carried old-fashioned bouquets.

Miss McKenna Dinner Guest.

Miss Bambie McKenna, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Royal T. McKenna, attended a dinner given by her cousin, Miss Patti Edmonston, and today will hurry back to her studies at Vassar, returning to Washington for the Christmas holidays, when her parents will entertain at a ball in her honor.

Miss Ruth Sowers, daughter of Mrs. William S. Sowers, was also presented at the cotillion last night.

Miss Sylvine Clagett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bowie Contee Clagett, of Upper Marlboro, Md., wore an interesting gown. It was of lovely old satin in a luscious shade of golden cream brocaded with a wheat design, and was made on the new "old-fashioned" lines. It had belonged to her great grandmother and the only trimming of the fitted bodice was a row of tiny covered buttons that had been on that other frock of long ago.

Wears Cream Taffeta.

Miss Mary Jane Stanley, daughter of the Assistant Attorney General and Mrs. William Stanley, was attired in cream taffeta made with a very full-gathered skirt and trimmed across the front from shoulder to shoulder with a spray of bright flowers.

Miss Jane Esther Platt, daughter of Mr. Landra Platt, was wearing a becoming gown of white crepe made on fitted lines. The cowl neck and the scallops at the bottom of the skirt were lined with scarlet satin.

Miss Margaret McMullen, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. John McMullen, had on regal silver, fashioned on molded lines with a softly draped neckline and the straight skirt ended in a brief train.

An impromptu party was given Sunday night in the chancery of the Chilean Embassy for the four members of the Chilean riding team which arrived Sunday from Toronto, where they had taken part in the International Horse Show. The Secretaries of the embassy invited a gay group for a buffet supper and dancing in the attractive rooms of the chancery now occupied by the Second Secretary, Senor Don Mario Rodriguez, and the Second Secretary, Senor Don Fernando Illanes Benitez.

Deb's Diary

Who, What and Where —as She Sees It.

DEAR DIARY:

And so the good old soda at last has been supplanted in the hearts and appetites of mankind. Not long ago Adrienne Webb (who is making her debut in Baltimore this year, but who comes over here quite often) and her escort, after trotting around to various teas and what-not, were on their way to Washington. They paused for refreshments, but what did they order? Banana split? Chocolate soda? Lemonade?—No, indeed, they each had a huge glass of milk.

When Mildred English's sister, Peggy, "joined the Navy" last summer, the twin-sister act in our set was broken up. Ever since then we have been on the lookout for a successor, or rather, a pair of successors. The other evening Cole McFarland danced by with a pretty blonde just as the orchestra stopped for breath. He introduced her—Mary Ahn McFarland—and so the jinx is off; we have at last found another pair of twins. Mary Ann was just here for a brief visit, but will be back again when Christmas offers Vassar too much competition.

Mathilde Rodgers, who must have learned to read from Vogue and Harper's Bazaar, was wearing the most fetching gown the other night. It was of wine-colored velvet and made on long lines with a high neck fashioned of a twist of the velvet and gold.

Miss Dorothy Maas Marries Diplomat

Weds Officer of Guatemalan Legation Here.

Of interest in Washington is the wedding of Miss Dorothy C. Maas, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Pieter C. Mass, of New York, to Mr. Enrique Lopez-Herrarte, of Guatemala City, Guatemala and Washington, which took place Saturday at the Holy Trinity Church, Brooklyn, N. Y. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Lorin Bradford Young. Only the immediate families were present.

The bride attended William and Mary College, Williamsburg, Va., and Barnard College, New York City.

Mr. Lopez-Herrarte is the son of Dr. and Mrs. Mariano J. Lopez, of Guatemala City. He attended schools in Switzerland and is a graduate of Columbia College and the law school of Columbia University. He is first secretary of the Guatemala Legation here and is a member of the New York bar.

The couple will make their home in Washington.

Students to Give Cohan Comedy

Mask and Bauble Will Present "The Tavern" Tomorrow Night.

When Mr. William S. Dawson, G. U. '34, plays the role of sheriff in the George Cohan comedy, "The Tavern," at least two persons will be keenly interested in the historical background of his home, New Bern, N. C. The Solicitor General and Mrs. J. Crawford Biggs are proud of the first graduate of Georgetown, William Gaston, of New Bern, who was elected to the General Assembly of North Carolina in 1808, who was a member of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Congresses, later United States Senator from North Carolina, and in 1833 a justice of the State Supreme Court.

Gaston Hall at Georgetown University is a memorial to this illustrious son of North Carolina.

Novel Designs In Soap Shown In Local Shops

Unique Gifts Also Make Up Many Counters; Good Lotion for Hands.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

FROM a field of fertile imagination to a shop counter comes Porky Pine.

Now Porky Pine is a pig, a most extraordinary pig. You hold him in the palm of your hand and he gazes up at you with a strangely immobile countenance. You put him in a bowl of water and he's perfectly at home.

That's because Porky Pine is made of soap, a lovely soft green soap that smells of pine woods. He comes to you all tied up in a gunny sack with his name, "Porky Pine" printed in green letters across the outside. Shoppers are already discovering that Porky is a prize pig for only 25 cents.

Even more ingenuity in soap creations is found in the set of quintuplets, five pale-faced little soap babies resting side by side in a flannel lined box. Each one looks exactly like the other and is dressed identically, too, even to the little net bonnets tying under the chins.

Imported novelty soaps at another store include six very real looking kittens, three billikens, checker draughts and quite eatable-looking tangerines.

Novel Gift Designs.

The wide rolled brimmed volcano peaked Mexican sombrero lends itself admirably to the design of ash trays featured in a local gift department which abounds with numerous small and novel items.

The ash trays, about the size of a man's fist, are molded from clay and baked hard. They are then painted in the red and yellows of Mexico and sent forth to sell for a lordly dime. Slightly larger sombrero trays are 15 cents, and still portlier ones, 25 cents.

The idea is to flip your ashes in the brim and rest your cigarette across the crown.

Hash Period Postponed.

Chefs say that the pre-hash life of a roast or fowl depends entirely on the carving. A botched job and there'll be hash next day, a good job and the hash period is postponed.

And every good chef knows that the carving depends as much on the sharpness of the blade as it does the master hand behind the blade. A local store does its part toward promoting goo carving and good carvers by offering carving sets at the special price of $1.19. These include a black bone-handled knife, fork and sharpener.

Housework Takes Toll.

Hands—how many things they tell—both good and bad. There's one woman whose hands are coarse skinned, wrinkled and red. You know immediately that despite the luxury spelled by her modish clothes her hours are not all leisure, but that housework takes a toll which she neglects to hide. It is not her work that she should be ashamed of, but of the neglect to hands which should be features of grace and beauty and symbols of her charm. And there is the woman whose carefully kept hands tell a tale of careful grooming. You instinctively know that she is painstaking in the details of her toilet.

Time alone is not what counts in hand beauty. A specialist who has made it her life work to create hand preparations sponsors a soft satiny cream which imparts a pearl white finish. A small dab of this on your hands, your wrist, work it slowly in, and the redness, the coarseness of the skin disappears as if by magic and you have hands as fair as any that thrilled the poet by the Shalimar. It conceals freckles and other blotches that embarrass the woman who knows what points in her favor exquisite hands may be. In the evening you may also use it on your neck and shoulders to give a soft, pale transparency to your skin.

Smart, Unusual Apron.

You pay just so much for an apron that is already made. And you pay so little for one that isn't. At least it isn't altogether made. It's printed on a large square of percale, printed even to the pockets, the straps and the ties. All you do is clip these out, just as you would paper dolls, hem them and tack them together, and you've a smart, unusual apron.

The colors are fast, guaranteed washable, and there are certainly colors galore, in dozens of different patterns. Twenty-nine cents is all this not "quite ready apron" costs you.

Priscilla Sewing Cabinet.

A Priscilla sewing cabinet is scarcely larger than a good sized sewing basket. The chief difference is that it's made of wood—either maple or walnut. It sits on its short, stubby legs by the side of your chair, with a curved handle in easy reach.

Two wooden flaps on the top fold back and allow easy access to a roomy interior. Here are double shelves for thread, needles, pins and tape, and plenty of room alongside for the darning, patching or knitting. The cabinets are only $1.

Case For Short Trips.

A compact little white pigskin case contains all the traveler needs for a short trip. There are three creams, two lotions, powder, rouge, lipstick, shadow and brow pencil.

Call Ruth Anne Davis, of The Washington Post, National 4200, Extension 105, for further information, or write, inclosing stamped, addressed envelope.

Following Up a Psychic.

Psychic bidding is a law unto itself. A good working rule, however, is: "Don't make psychic bids unless you know exactly what you are doing." This does not mean that you must have a clear objective in mind. It does not mean that you must anticipate the exact effect of your psychic bid upon the subsequent bidding. Foresight of this type, of course, marks out the good psychic from the mere stab in the dark—but the extraordinary success that attends the mere stab in the dark will always tempt players to transcend any tight little rules that may be laid down for psychic bidding.

What I mean precisely is that the psychic bidder must always realize that he runs the risk of cheating his own side out of a game or slam, or that he risks leading to an overbid in a game hand if he makes a deliberately unsound bid at a time when he has no assurance that his side has not the balance of power.

North, Dealer.

East and West vulnerable.

♠ K Q 10 3 ♡ K 9 8 4 ◇ K 6 ♣ 8 6 3	N W E S	♠ A J ♡ J 6 5 2 ◇ 8 7 4 3 ♣ 7 4 2
	♠ — ♡ A Q 7 ◇ A Q J 10 9 5 2 ♣ K J 10

At two tables in a duplicate game both North players felt the urge to open the auction with a semipsychic spade bid. In each instance South responded with three diamonds, whereupon North unhappily bid three spades.

Of course, the spade suit strikes the South hand in the wrong spot. North can have a very good spade suit that may turn out to be useless. Unless North turns up with the King of diamonds and Ace of clubs South is content to stop at five diamonds. As South has made a bid that is forcing to game, he is now content to try to feel out the situation further by a bid of four diamonds.

One of the North players was a psychic bidder who "knew what he was doing." Guided by the simple principle that the fact he had made a psychic bid did not prevent his partner from holding a laydown game, he dutifully respected his partner's preliminary force and, with a prayer, bid four spades. South thereupon was content with five diamonds, and the contract was, of course, ice cold.

The other North player was a bridge player akin to the chess player of whom Capablanca once said, "He makes the moves of the masters without understanding them." Imbued with the idea that his psychic spade bid might lead to a catastrophe, he decided to keep out of trouble by passing four diamonds. Thus he assured his partnership of a bottom score on the board.

It is true that had North ever bid the clubs or taken any action other than to reiterate the spades, South would, by his own account, have leaped to six diamonds, but this South player actually made six and he could not be stopped after the opening lead of the spade King.

The play was to ruff the spade, then knock out the King of trumps. West's best exit is a club, which South wins. South takes out the trumps, then leads a club to dummy, and leads a spade for ruff. Having bailed East out of spades, South cashes the rest of his trumps, saving in dummy one spade, one heart and the last two clubs. Then South leads his own last club, overtaking in dummy and on the thirteenth club he discards his small heart. West is caught in a spade-heart squeeze. Of course, he can compel declarer to guess whether to finesse the hearts by blanking his King—but the actual West player did not have the iron nerve to make this play without giving himself away by squirming. South guessed right that the squeeze had worked and that the finesse would not.

What Today Means

"Sagittarius."

IF DECEMBER 4 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:45 to 11:45 a. m., from 2:45 to 4:45 p. m. and from 6:45 to 8:45 p. m. The danger periods are from 6:45 to 8:45 a. m., from 4:45 to 6:45 p. m. and from 8:45 to 10:45 p. m.

Preliminary to starting any social or business activities on this date, it might prove to be good judgment to check up and see if you have overlooked having made a previous appointment. Influences many tend to make some people absent-minded, so it might pay to keep mentally alert.

It is likely to require a lot of steady "plugging" to accomplish the things you wish to do, whether they are of a business or social nature. Extremes are liable to exist in monetary affairs—money may be either very plentiful or hard to obtain. The wise man and woman will guard against any appearance of being overbearing by suppressing any display of egotism, for such an attitude will possibly result in a humiliating rebuke.

Your mental attitude possibly will have an important bearing on the state of your physical being on this December 4, so avoid allowing yourself to indulge in fits of temper, or to become agitated over trivial matters. Married and engaged couples, as well as those engaged in the quest for love, should stick to the straight and narrow path of rectitude if they wish to avoid some pitfalls which may prove difficult to get out of.

If a woman and December 4 is your birthday, conditions relating to your personal affairs are apt to terminate favorably. You are probably very susceptible to receiving inspirations that should lead to splendid accomplishments in either some form of artistic or musical achievement. Dexterity with your hands will perhaps be the means of very lucrative employment. Writing and educational work may be mediums through which recognition might be gained. Married life should have a great deal to offer you.

The child born on December 4 usually, when it arrives at high school age, displays creative ability which is likely to attract attention and secure it advantages over the average child. Constructive criticism will be readily accepted, but critical remarks are likely to be resented.

If a man and December 4 is your natal day, if you do not allow your romantic and poetic imagination to cause you to lose sight of the practical side of life, it should prove an advantage, instead of a disadvantage. Music, art, literature and the stage are among some of the lines of activity, in which you might excel. Married life should have many advantages for you.

Successful people born on December 4:

John Cotton, Puritan clergyman.
Thomas Godfrey, poet.
Benjamin Silliman, jr., chemist.
Lillian Russell, actress.
Thomas Carlyle, author.
Frank Jay Gould, capitalist.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

When Children Won't Eat.

WE often hear the expression, "My child will not eat unless I make him." And when the child is compelled to eat, family meals become ordeals; they are anything but pleasant social gatherings. It may well be that the scolding, urging and threatening of the child at meal-time will lay a foundation for nervous instability.

Parents are often dominated by the thought that physical stature and weight are guarantees of good health and resistance to disease. Stature is generally dependent upon inheritance and the child will resemble physically the father, the mother, or one of the grandparents. Nevertheless in order to make the child big, to make him grow, food is crowded into the youngster at the behest of the figuratively hickory switch.

Now and then a child will not eat because he is ill. If he has been eating normally and loses his appetite suddenly it will be far wiser to put him to bed than to force or bribe him to eat.

Sometimes the child wants attention. He knows that he can concentrate on himself the undivided solicitude of the household by not touching his food. He has learned that a waning appetite will bring to his plate dainties that he could not otherwise procure, and then, too, there may be rewards if he will only finish a saucer of this or a glass of that.

There are a hundred and one things that interfere with the maintenance of a normal appetite. A child is far more likely to become capricious or fussy about food if the subject receives too much attention. The New England mother who squelched the first complaint about food with the rejoinder, "Eat what is set before you and ask no questions, for conscience's sake," had no trouble with dainty appetites.

If the child is well, appetite and hunger usually may be relied upon as safe guides. While overexercise can kill appetite, underexercise is more deadly. Normal play out of doors ordinarily will bring children romping into the house at mealtime hungry as bears. Orderly procedure at the table will maintain hunger until the end of the meal. On the contrary, gulping a glass of milk without taking a breath may bring on a sensation of fullness that kills appetite.

It does not follow that the child who is always hungry is well nourished. There may be some difficulty with digestion and the child who does not gain normally while using fairly large quantities of food should be given a careful examination.

Some thought should be given to making mealtime attractive. It ought not to be a period of serious conversation over finances between the father and the mother, or of enumerating the worries or troubles of the day. Rather it should be a happy family gathering, to which the child is naturally attracted. Hurry kills appetite and nutrition as well. To this single factor much of the difficulty may be attributed. Children should be allowed to remain at the table for a reasonable period, no matter who wants to clear off the dishes, no matter how insistent is the call to attend an early movie.

In spite of all that can be done there are many habitually poor eaters. With such cases adequate food will be taken if four or five meals are planned instead of three. Sometimes the child's stomach empties slowly. If, on the other hand, the stomach empties rapidly, food is called for before mealtime arrives. A glass of milk in the middle of the forenoon and another in the middle of the afternoon has solved many problems of undernourishment.

How to Prepare Candied Fruits For Christmas

Two Kinds of Sirup Used in Making Popular Delicacies.

By Dorothea Duncan.

DECEMBER is a month that housewives give over exclusively to the preparation of Christmas delicacies. Some one would like to know how to make the sirup for the candied fruit which is so often used in Christmas recipes.

There are two kinds of sirup, one which is used for glace fruits or nuts and the other for candied fruit. The first is prepared in the following manner:

Glace Fruits or Nuts.

2 cups sugar
1 cup water
2-3 cup light corn sirup
Small fruit or sections of larger fruits or whole nut-meats

Make a sirup of the sugar, water and corn sirup. Boil, without stirring, to the hard crack stage (300 degrees F.). Remove the saucepan from the fire and put it into an outer pan of boiling water to keep the sirup from hardening. Drop in the well-drained fruit or the nut-meats, a few at a time. Skim out and place on heavy wax paper to dry.

Sirup for Candied Fruits.

2 cups sugar
1 cup water
1-3 cup light corn sirup

Boil together until the sirup spins a thread when dropped from the spoon (234 degrees F.).

Candied orange, lemon or grapefruit peel are the most popular fruits candied at this time of the year, and this is the method one follows to prepare them using the above sirup:

Cut the peel into halves or quarters. Let them stand over night in salted water (1 tablespoon salt to 1 quart water). Drain and wash thoroughly. Simmer in clear water, changing the water several times until it has no bitter taste. When the peel is tender, drain, cut into strips or add whole to the sirup and simmer until it is tranparent. Drain, roll in granulated sugar, and allow peel to dry well before packing.

Following is a recipe that has been requested.

Sweet Potato Pie.

Pare and boil or bake sweet potatoes, and press them through a sieve.

Add the following ingredients to the sieved sweet potatoes, 1½ cups.

¼ cup brown sugar
1 teaspoon cinnamon
Nutmeg (amount according to preference)
3 tablespoons butter
1 teaspoon salt
2 eggs
2 cups milk

Turn into an unbaked crust and bake for 10 minutes in a hot oven (450 degrees F.) to cook the bottom and sides of the crust. Reduce the temperature and continue cooking at 325 degrees F. until a silver knife inserted in the center will come out clean.

Be sure that pie does not boil as that will make it watery.

What is a fillet?

A fillet or filet is a market term for the tenderloin of meat, used especially when applied to beef or pork. For example, a filet mignon is a small tenderloin steak. A fillet of filet is also a culinary term for a strip or band of meat or fish without bone.

Child Chats

By Alice Fox Pitts.

THIRTY years ago it was out of the question for a girl to give father and mother a Christmas gift that was bought in a store. She made it, of course, putting loving effort into pasting sandpaper onto red cardboard for a match scratcher; or crocheting a cover for a glass hair receiver.

The useless gifts we made in those days have no place in the modern home, yet there was a nice thought behind them. For the love that went into the making was more important than the gift itself.

But whether a present is made or bought, it should be the child's own gift. When mother does her Christmas shopping and with her own money buys a pair of house slippers, to appear under the Christmas tree with a card, "From Sally to Daddy," I question whether either Sally or her father derive much pleasure from the gift.

If a child has saved Christmas money from her allowance, let her buy gifts of her own choosing with it. Or if you are in the habit of doing her shopping for her, give her money instead, not too liberally either, and turn her loose in the stores to buy her own presents for relatives or friends. Guidance, in the way of suggestions, may be necessary, but she will find greater joy in giving if she selects and buys the gift herself.

LUXURY

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE

"WHY NOT?" Jocelyn shrugged her shoulders.

"It's horrible. Of course, you couldn't come back to us." Rita spoke quickly. She didn't want Jocelyn back. "But now that Ollie isn't spending his money on that horrible Carrie Franks—and I have you to thank for that, Lynn—he's very generous. I could easily let you have 5,000 francs."

Jocelyn shook her head. "I couldn't possibly take it, Rita."

"Well, there's one thing we can do——" Rita slipped her cigarette holder into her moire bag. "I'm giving a dinner at Ciro's tomorrow night. And I want you to come."

"Will you tell me why?" Jocelyn moved nearer, a touch of color to her cheeks. The workings of Rita's mind fascinated her.

"We might as well part gracefully," Rita's low, sweet voice sounded earnest. "Put on one of your most charming gowns and come to that dinner. Then announce, yourself, that you're leaving us. Going—— oh, anywhere. I assure you it's the thing to do, Lynn. Suppose later you decide to marry someone in our crowd——"

"Temple?"

Rita looked up quickly. Was it possible——?

The Rudest Man.

Jocelyn laughed. "How transparent you are, after all," she said. But she was thinking over what Rita had said. It was true. Her leaving the Keenes so suddenly would mean gossip. And why should she suffer that sort of thing? "Yes, I'll come," she decided. "It will be rather amusing. You and I made our debut together. Now I'll make my exit under your—patronage. Yes, it is funny. But I'm not doing it for your sake, Rita." And she laughed again.

Rita had to call Ogden Temple's town house and the chateau before she got him. Would he dine at Ciro's tomorrow night? An impromptu dinner—only about 20.

He regretted. The deep tones of his voice over the wire carried the sense of him, huge, impassive.

Rita's delicate eyebrows frowned. "I think you should know that Jocelyn isn't stopping with us any more," she said quietly. "And she isn't going back to her husband. I can't tell you why. But she's very unhappy, and alone, Mr. Temple. She's coming tomorrow night——"

Ogden Temple waited for so long that Rita thought he had cut her off, which would be in keeping with his reputation as the rudest man in the world. "I promised I would never annoy her again," he said finally. "But if she has left you, I will come."

He was the rudest man——!

Rita Keene's visit unsettled Jocelyn. She wished she had not promised to go to the dinner at Ciro's. What if it did mean a graceful exit from a set that would have no further use for her once they learned she had broken with the Keenes. Why care what those people said or thought?

But Jocelyn did care. That was the trouble. She looked with distaste at the green stained walls, the stuffy furniture of this room in which she had buried herself after the ugly affair at Fontainebleau. She hated it now. She hated the slovenly maid who brought her bitter French coffee in the mornings. She hated the smug Frenchwoman with her tiny diamond earrings and full breasts who presided over the pension, where old ladies and lean students chattered at meal-times around wine-spotted tablecloths.

Between Two Worlds.

The truth of it was that these past weeks of luxury, lovely clothes and gay places to wear them, delicious food, delicate wines—all the smooth effortless service that went with money—had spoiled Jocelyn. Through each day, the sense of dwindling francs increased her panic. No word from Dick since he had sailed. And under no circumstances would she ask him for help.

"I'm not anything, now," she told herself as she paced her small room. She had indeed fallen between two worlds—the smart little world she had returned to so disastrously as the Keenes' guest, and the safe world of Dick and her home, which she had forfeited through mistakes and folly.

Why worry? If she went to Ciro's, she would at least have one last decent dinner and a brief escape from her own black thoughts. One last evening to be with people whose fears did not dwell in their pocketbooks; so-called old friends who had known her as lovely Jocelyn Benckard before she married Dick Crane. What an impractical little fool they would think her for throwing over Ogden Temple and his millions just because a fair-haired grey-eyed boy had taken all the love she had to give to any man.

"I'll go," she decided. Yes, and she would wear the white gown she had worn that evening at the Ritz when Ogden Temple, towering over her, had said—"We are going to love each other, and it will not be a slight or short affair."

The afternoon stretched emptily ahead with nothing to do before she started dressing for dinner at nine. She decided to go out and wander among the beautiful things Paris had to offer.

She sighed, pulling on a chic little black straw, one of Rita's casual gifts.

Slowly coming down the stairs, she stopped short. In the lobby below, handing his card to the plump madame of the pension, Prince Glazanoff stood, elegant in light brown, an orange rose in his buttonhole. His tall blond figure seemed to fill the hall.

How had he ever traced her here? And why——?

"I am so glad I found you, cherie amie." He bent to kiss her hand.

But Jocelyn made no answering move. "This is rather a surprise, prince," she said, coldly.

Glazanoff's handsome face darkened. Then he shrugged and smiled. "It is perhaps indiscreet. They had your forwarding address at the Hotel Georges V. I managed to obtain it with the greatest difficulty. I had to see you before I leave for Rome tonight," he said with sudden abruptness. "First of all, my apoligies, madame," and he bowed before her with a military click of his heels. "I was unpardonable that night at Fontainebleau. My only excuse is that you were very beautiful."

Jocelyn looked at his gravely.

He Confessed Quarrel.

"I don't think there is any more to say." Jocelyn spoke quietly, her profile exquisite against the slant of the little black hat.

Glazanoff's tone drew her eyes back to him. "You have not heard?"

"Heard what?" In spite of herself she sounded anxious.

"In Harry's bar yesterday afternoon," Glazanoff watched her. "Ollie Keene and I had—words together and we came to blows." He glanced down at the hand with the heavy seal ring with which he had cut Ollie's cheek. "I was obliged to make a little scandal. I do not permit any man to insult me," he said contemptuously, and he added, his mouth cruel and straight, "—nor any woman to play with me."

"You and Ollie quarreled? But what is that to me?" "You are courageous," he answered in his soft gutturals. "But you do not know the world. It is a pity I can not protect you from it. This, however, I will tell you—and that is why I am here: Be very, very careful, my little friend, of Rita. She will hate you now more than ever."

"But why?"

Fiction Comes to 'Life' in Dolls Created by Madame Alexander

Particular Care Given Choice Of Wardrobes

Amer.-Tots That Resemble American Children Are Latest Design.

The lady who makes fiction come to life—that's Mme. Alexander. Children who have read about and loved those characters that live in their imaginations now have them as playmates, thanks to the dark-haired lady who loves them, too.

This is the second of a series of articles pertaining to dolls.

By Katherine Smith.

WHEN BEATRICE ALEXANDER was a little girl she had hundreds of dolls to play with. Now she makes hundreds of dolls for other children. She is known today as Mme. Alexander, and her "children," as her dolls are often called, have become members of families throughout the country.

Many years ago, in New York City, there was a little shop. Outside hung a shingle bearing the words: "Doll Hospital" and a blue cross. This was the first doll hospital in America, and was established by Mme. Alexander's father in 1885.

In those days, most dolls had porcelain heads and papier mache bodies. One drop, and the head was shattered to bits. Beatrice's father had a great deal of business, and Beatrice had many dolls around to play with and to admire.

Too, she might have comforted a tearful owner, bent her dark head over a neatly patched skull, compared handsome dolls with less lovely ones, but this atmosphere gave her an appreciation of the fellings of a child for her doll. She loved those broken toys, as she loves the dolls she makes today.

Many Inspired by Books.

Most of her dolls are of literary inspiration. Alice in Wonderland appeared three years ago in her blue dress and white pinafore; David Copperfield walked into market in his stove pipe hat; Oliver Twist was characteristically asking for "more."

Madame Alexander designs these dolls with a thorough knowledge of the child's mind. She says: "Children are curiously loyal. They like what they have liked before—perhaps, in a new form. For instance, I've found they want as dolls those characters they have read about and learned to love in books. Nothing pleases them so much as to see their favorite Alice come right out of Wonderland, blue dress, pianafore and all!"

So, as a result of this belief, "Little Women" characters step from the book and into the homes of the country. Meg, always womanly, tom-boy Jo, Beth, the quiet sister, and golden-haired Amy are as nearly human as composition and artistry can make them. The Lullaby Baby of Walt Disney and the marionettes of Tony Sarg become dolls as well.

Mme. Alexander's newest creations are the Amer-Tots that look, as nearly as possible, like American children. Each one is characteristically different, their faces individually painted by portrait painters. They are made of a new composition that gives their cheeks a fresh, peaches and cream finish. Best of all, each Amer-Tot has a different wardrobe, designed by the doll lady as carefully as if they were live children.

Dolls' Dresses Tailored.

Dresses are tailored, ruffleless, far removed with the former conception of what the well dressed doll should wear. A red velveteen dress with white collar and pearl buttons is as handsome as the party dress of the doll's owner. Broadcloth coats and hats for boy and girl dolls follow the style of the brother and sister sets that trot to school or play tag on Saturday afternoons.

"Character dolls, rather than pretty-pretty ones, are the rage of the moment," says Mme. Alexander. 'Baby dolls, even tiny new ones, are wrinkled and red, and slightly bald, if necessary. One very popular doll has hair made of dyed red fur, another's head is towsled and tow-colored.

"Walking dolls are almost out. Children don't want dolls to be too lifelike, they like to use their imaginations. However, elaborately jointed dolls, whose postures can be changed are popular. Children don't want manufacturers to do too much for them."

Designs Own Wardrobe.

As she is talented along dress designing lines, Mme. Alexander styles all her own wardrobe as well as those of her dolls. But informally, she dresses simply, entertaining at home in a gay embroidered Russian smock and bright leather sandals.

In her home there is a profusion of dolls around; she herself is addicted to the telephone and boudoir variety. She started making dolls 17 years ago, when her daughter grew too old to be actively interested in miniature humans of bisque, rags and sawdust. But as long as there are children in the world, and as long as they love dolls, Mme. Alexander's factory will be humming, her small dark head continually creating new styles, each as well received as the last.

Her offices are in New York, but her salesrooms are all over the country, wherever dolls are sold.

Tomorrow—The doll surgeon, Mrs. F. B. Rogers, tells of her experiences in her doll hospital.

Mme. Alexander, who grew up in a doll hospital, makes fact of fiction by reproducing character dolls out of children's books. Today she is head of a large doll business.

Athletes Adopt Indoor Sports During Winter

College Women Seek Warm Pool or Gymnasium for Exercise.

By Ware Torrey and Janet Owen.

AS WINTER CLOSES down on the outdoor sports, colleges full of girl athletes flock in to gyms and pools, to be met by an array of new sports and newly popular sports.

Crew is an old stand-by, dating back to bustles at Wellesley, but the new wave of enthusiasm reaches such totals as the 298 girls going out for crew at Smith College, from the freshman and sophomore classes, plus half that amount again from the upper classes. When ice films Paradise Pond at Smith, the pond is taken over by ice hockey, while crew members go indoors to put in intensive practice on rowing machines.

Squash rackets is newly invading the colleges. Vassar's new physical education and sports building, Kenyon Hall, dedicated last spring, makes elaborate provision for squash with three perfectly constructed courts. This year Smith has added three new courts, which are being opened for use this week.

Smith students have just started a series of dry-ski lessons, under instruction of the Dartmouth College ski coach, learning indoors the technique they will put to use with the first heavy snow.

Battleboard tennis, a new sport originated and developed by Mary K. Browne, former national tennis champion, and taught by Miss Browne at Lake Erie College, Plainesville, Ohio, is being started for the first time at Barnard College this season.

The battleboard tennis court is half the size of an outdoor tennis court, marked as the court on one side of the net is marked outdoors, and the balls are driven against a backboard marked with a line at the height of a standard net top.

Social Graces Demand Soft And Low Voice

Pleasing Inflexions Pay Large Dividends in Feminine Charm.

By Frances Mangum.

AN OLD admonition has taken on new meaning.

Mothers of 50 or even 15 years ago who cautioned their young daughters to speak in a ladylike voice were only touching on a matter that is now stressed by schools, colleges and organizations in every city.

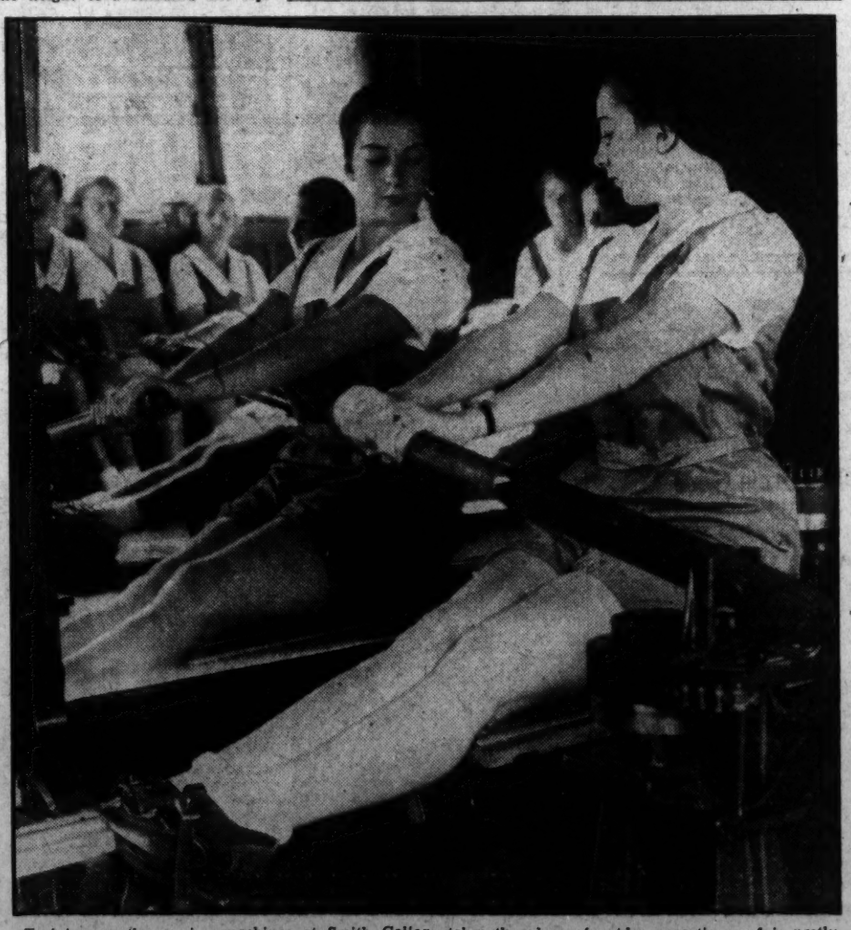
In New York candidates for teachers' positions must take a speech test. There is little chance of passing if the voice is guttural, nasal, hoarse, flat, whining, high, hollow, thin, monotonous or unmodulated.

It is the common complaint of visitors from other countries that American women are careless about their voices. And strange as it may seem, those with few cultural advantages and scant education are not the chief offenders.

Consider yourself for a moment. If your voice is loud or harsh, make a conscious effort to control it. Purposely pitch it lower. Lessen your volume. Remember to speak softly but strive to retain all qualities of resonance.

It has been proved, time and again, that the voice most easily heard over the telephone is low and distinct. It is the same in conversation. The woman who speaks softly, distinctly, with attractive inflexions, is the woman who captivates her listeners. Of course there are many whose exaggeratedly soft and sibilant tones are nerve wrecking. One soon wearies from the strain of listening.

In all cases it is the happy medium we should strive for. Remember to open your mouth properly, practice vowel exercises, hum to gain resonance, practice reading aloud and at the same time listening to your voice.



Training on the rowing machines at Smith College takes the place of outdoor practice, and is vastly helped by watching one's technique in a mirror. By spring the girls are ready to show their prowess on Paradise Pond.

"Alice D." Urged to Solicit Husband's Cooperation in New Life for Future, and to Enlist Physician's Aid if Necessary; "Faith" Told to Keep Diary.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Two recent letters to your column have so touched my own experiences that I am constrained to send answers to them. One is for "Alice D.," whose letter you printed November 27 and the other for "Faith" whom you answered November 29.

• • • •

Use them as you see fit, but I am deeply concerned that poor, bewildered "Alice D." should have a good physician's care. If you publish or send this letter, she may ask a physician's name. Of course, she should have the counsel and care of Dr. White or one of his assistants. If that is not possible, my own family physician has done some good work in that field. I believe he could help her.

• • • •

May I express here my appreciation of the sympathy, the intelligence and the dignity you consistently bring to an exacting department of an arduous profession and give thanks to you for the real help you have been to a member of my own family. Sincerely,

M. M. S.

DEAR M. S. S.: For "Alice D.," for "Faith" and for myself, I want to thank you for your letters which came this morning. I am turning my column over to you for the day. Your answers to "Alice D." and "Faith," respectively, follow in order. M. H.

Advice for "Alice D."

DEAR ALICE D.: Your recent letter compels my sympathy. If at all possible, command a quiet hour in your home and have a good talk with yourself. Outline clearly to yourself where you intend to stand in your future domestic relations. This will not be easy and you will not be able to hold the stand firmly at first, but outline it clearly, anyway.

• • • •

Carefully go over a talk which you will have with your husband. Tell him how his treatment of you is hurting you, physically and emotionally—and how it is hurting him. Suggest thtat he cooperate with you in putting the home on a budget basis and that he make payment of your allowance as promptly, as willingly and as agreeably as he pays any other obligation.

• • • •

Select a quiet time and have this talk with him. Make your approach in a friendly way; do not lose your temper; do not nag.

If he refuses or neglects to cooperate with you, it is imperative that you call in outside help. I can not make this too emphatic. You are overburdened and overwrought and must have help. So must your husband.

• • • •

If you have a good physician, go to him. Tell him your problem. Show him your letter. He may call in your husband and explain the need for a readjustment. If he does not, seek the aid of a physician who understands the dangers of emotional maladjustment, especially to the mother of small children, and he will help you.

• • • •

If you do not know where to find such a physician, act as you did in your first effort to find help. Write Miss Haworth, inclosing a self-addressed, stamped envelope, and she will give you dependable advice.

M. S. S.

Directed to "Faith."

DEAR FAITH: Loneliness is the common lot of mankind. Even those acquaintances of yours who have succeeded in establishing "satisfactory" lives of their own doubtless have their longings beneath their sunny surfaces, but they have learned that an important basal part of a "satisfactory" life is the appearance of such, and so they keep their lacks out of the picture.

• • • •

When you write "they have few crusts of companionship to toss in my direction," do you not see that you are calling yourself a beggar? Would you think it strange if your acquaintances should refuse to entertain a beggar of material things within their circle? Then why think it strange if they soon grow tired of a spiritual beggar?

• • • •

Your letter reveals mental ability, yet you write: "I have tried all the routine suggestions: cultural study, concentration on a hobby, going to church, being neighborly, being well groomed, mentally alert, but nothing works."

Are you willing to try a plan that is not routine? I believe it will work. Eventually it will. I believe, bring you friendships you will prize. In the meantime it will prove of compelling interest; it will lead you to an acquaintance with the one person you most desire to know—yourself.

Every night when you are ready to retire, take pen and paper and write out everything that happened during your day; all the trival incidents of the office; what you had for dinner; what the occupants of the street car looked like; where the taxi driver comes from and how many children he has. No smallest thing is too insignificant to set down.

When you have written all you wish to write of the day's happenings—trival or important—write your reactions to them. Were you interested? amused? bored? indifferent? angry? pleased?

• • • •

Be honest in these revelations. No one will read them but yourself, so if you took two of the office stamps for your own use, don't shirk writing it down. Confess, also, if true, that you consider your salary inadequate and you are, therefore, justified in taking as many stamps as you need. If the pretty blonde dresses better than she should on her salary and distributes her smiles hither and yon, tell your diary how you seethed inside when she got the invitation to lunch you hoped to get.

Don't be afraid to tell the diary pages that you are not honestly seeking friends; that what you really want is a good, kind, handsome, affectionate, cultured, wealthy husband who will take you on a Mediterranean honeymoon.

Write out every thought that skitters through your head; all your desires, loves, hates, longings, wishes, dreams. Your diary will keep all secrets. After six months of this procedure, read over your writings (be sure to keep them) and they will reveal to you why you are failing to realize the deep wish of your heart.

• • • •

You will have a different picture of yourself. You will see that although you now complain "they have few crusts of companionship to toss in my direction," you really do not want their "crusts." You want a full loaf of your own, with butter and jam.

• • • •

Should you then decide to "concentrate on a hobby," or "try" cultural study, choose one that holds a natural interest for you and that will bring you association with persons similarly interested. Sketching, law, cooking, painting, mental hygiene, rose culture, interior decorating, social work—take one. Find a way to engage in it. It will lead you to friendships and, perhaps, to that Mediterranean cruise.

M. S. S.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write to her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Men Are Called Best Dressed By Rash Male

MEN HAVE better taste than women when it comes to clothes. At the risk of being run out of New York by a feminine mob, Kenneth Collins, assistant to the president of Gimbel Brothers department store, came forth with this dictum recently.

He tempered his remark by explaining the men's good taste in dress was the result of fear of the unconventional. This fear is responsible for the year in and year out conservatism in masculine suits and ties, he added.

Proof of woman's taste for clothes fundamentally ludicrous is the laughter evoked by styles only three or four years old, Mr. Collins believes.

"From time to time women's clothes of former days are displayed and they invariably seem ridiculous," he said. "If there had ever been any real beauty there, we would still be able to see it today. I can't imagine any one roaring with laughter at the Parthenon 10 or 20 years after it was built. The cathedrals of Rheims and Chartes are considered as beautiful now as when they were first constructed. There is something of fundamental beauty and symmetry about these edifices which is eternal."

He thinks the nearest approach woman's clothes can make to eternal beauty is to cling to lines that most closely harmonize with those of the figure. The Empire dress was a move in that direction in Mr. Collins' opinion.

Mme. Natalie Schaffer Is Embroidery Artist

Harris & Ewing.

Mme. Natalie Schaffer, in her eighteenth century costume—an heirloom in brocade and pearls—which she will wear at the St. Nicholas Fair to be given at the Washington Club tomorrow.

TO MANY Washingtonians, Mme. Natalie Schaffer is known as the author of the play, "How Do You Like This Country?" and the autobiographical account entitled "Twice Born in Russia." But to her friends she has an additional distinction: She is an artist with the embroidery needle.

As an active member of the Circle of Lovers of Russian Arts and Crafts, she will have charge of the embroideries at the St. Nicholas Fair to be given tomorrow afternoon and night at the Washington Club for the benefit of the Russian Orthodox Church.

"Almost as long as I can remember I have done embroidery," she said. "When I was very young, the girls I knew learned to do fancy work as a pastime. Later, during the revolution, it was to me a means of making money at a time when I had no other way to provide food and clothing for my son and myself."

She was referring, particularly, to an incident—also recounted in "Twice Born in Russia"—in which she earned enough money to buy herself a dress by embroidering in a shop in Crimea.

"The wives of the new capitalists wished to wear extravagantly ornamented frocks," she explained. "This was to my advantage, and I made enough by embroidering their dresses to purchase a much-needed cambric dress for myself, and even high cloth shoes that concealed the lack of stockings."

Born in St. Petersburg of aristocratic parents, Mme. Schaffer was among the great number of Russians who abandoned their homes during the revolution and sought safety in Crimea. Later, after her marriage to a German, she acquired her husband's nationality and emerged from the circle of dangers that had threatened her since the overthrow of the old regime.

Her skill with the needle, once a means of providing necessities for her, is still one of her chief interests and has led her to make an intensive study of the numerous types of Russian arts and crafts.

"There was a decided difference between the needlework made by the upper classes and the peasants of Old Russia," Mme Schaffer explained. "The 'over-and-over' stitch, which gives a solid finish, was done by women of the aristocracy who often embroidered miniatures. The peasants usually worked in cross-stitch and made designs of animals and flowers frequently seen around Russian huts in the old days.

Work to Be Displayed.

Mme. Shaffer, herself, is skilled in embroidering miniatures, having received her training at the Historical Museum in Moscow.

A resident of the United States for the last five years, Mme. Schaffer frankly admitted she has no desire to return to her native country to live. "It is so different now," she went on, "and America has so many more opportunities for me and my son."

She mentioned her intense admiration for American women. "They are interesting because they have a desire to ask, to learn, to study," she said. "I admire them, too, because they are companionable, attractive, and smartly dressed.

"When I first came over here, however, I was amazed to discover that American women could have such a good time together when no men were present. It was inconceivable to me that a number of women would lunch together at a big table, with flowers, and with no men, and enjoy themselves. Now I have been here long enough to realize this is one way in which American women keep up with what is going on in the world.

Mme. Schaffer's husband, Paul Schaffer is now in Berlin where he is editor-in-chief of the "Berliner Tageblatt." Her 18-year-old son is with her here.

"I want him to be a real American," she said, "which, after all, shows better than anything else how much I admire Americans; doesn't it?"

"Student Tour," Featuring Maxine Doyle, Opens Engagement at Columbia Today

Film Is a Play With a Musical Comedy Setting

Ousts "Our Daily Bread;" Noted Visitors Here; Amusement Notes.

Reprinted From Yesterday's Last Edition.

It has been the fear of this department from the outset that the thing would become contagious. I mean this business of "yanking" a picture prior to the termination of the period for which it has been announced. And now Loew's Columbia is doing it!

Today "Student Tour," described as a merry comedy with music, makes its heretofore unheralded advent upon the screen of Loew's Columbia, replacing "Our Daily Bread" as the major attraction.

This is primarily important to the National Capital because it was for the featured feminine role in this production that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer borrowed the vivacious Miss Maxine Doyle, former mistress of ceremonies at the Earle, from Warner Brothers.

She is associated in the enactment of a lively story with Charles Butterworth, one of the drollest of the cinema's comics, and Jimmy Durante, whose explosive methods have blown him up near the top of the heap in Hollywood.

Story of Rambling Collegians.

Directed by "Chuck" Reisner, "Student Tour" relates the adventures of a group of young collegians and their girl friends who set out on a world cruise, with the eventual intention of arriving in London to participate in an athletic meet. The Messrs. Butterworth and Durante accompany the party in the capacity of male chaperons. They visit many spots abroad and succeed in getting into all manner of hilarious scrapes. "The Carlo," an astonishing new dance, is introduced during the development of the story, along with a batch of tuneful new songs.

The prodigious Miss Derle's part in the festivities is to reveal an engageing twinkle in her eye, a voice well suited to the songs she sings and some commendable histrionics. As her screen sweetheart, Washington will see Phil Regan, a handsome young fellow, who arrived before the cameras and microphones with a considerable reputation as a "singing policeman," or something of the sort.

"Student Tour," despite the implied possession of all these manifold merits, will continue through Thursday night of this week only. On Friday it will be followed by George M. Cohan's new starring film, "Gambling," which was written by its star as a stage play, in which he created the role in which he will appear in the film adaptation.

Speaking of sudden changes of bill, it should be borne in mind—although the fact already has been briefly celebrated in this space—that "Wagon Wheels" comes off the Metropolitan screen today following the unreeling that begins at 4:30 p. m. The box office thereupon will be closed until 7:45, when the ticket sale for one screening of "Flirtation Walk," co-starring Dick Powell and Ruby Keeler, with Pat O'Brien and a puncture-proof cast, will begin. Starting Tuesday morning, "Flirtation Walk" will be presented continuously, from 11 a. m. to closing.

Some Distinguished Visitors.

It was the privilege and pleasure of this column, over the week-end, to meet a distinguished group of European artists, making a nonprofessional visit to the United States with an absence of fanfare that amounts almost to traveling incognito.

Included among the group were Herr Rudolf Kommer, general manager and major factotum for Max Reinhardt, probably the theater's greatest living director; the Countess Ledebur, formerly Iris Tree, daughter of Sir Herbert Beerbohm-Tree, and a poetess of note; Eleanora von Mendelssohn, daughter of Felix Mendelssohn and a former member of Reinhardt's acting company, and Fritzi Massary, star of musical comedy and operetta on the Berlin stage, who created the title role of "Madame Pompadour" abroad.

While, with the exception of Herr Kommer, these brilliant visitors have no intention of making any professional appearances in America, they are intent upon meeting and paying their respects to Max Reinhardt.

Reinhardt to Produce Play.

Reinhardt, so Herr Kommer tells me, following the successful launching of the living production of Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream" in Chicago, following its triumph in the Hollywood Bowl, and the completion of the film version of the work for Warner Brothers at their Burbank, Calif., studios, will produce a new play for Broadway, the precise identity of which is not, at the moment, being revealed.

While he does not officially concern himself with Reinhardt's screen activities, Herr Kommer is intensely interested in the outcome of the experiment of placing one of the Bard's most difficult works, and the first Shakespeare play to be made as a "talkie," before the cameras. He has no fear of the outcome, under the guiding genius of Reinhardt, but refuses even to conjecture how long the filming will take. He is much more vitally interested and proportionately more cryptic, in the matter of the new production for the New York stage.

So, we shall see what we shall see.

Some hours after the review of Burton Holmes' "All Over Spain" travel talk has been completed and placed in type, Panjandrum Stephen E. Cochran of the National Theater, jingles the late Alexander Graham Bell's convenient invention to say that last night's repeat engagement of Mr. Holmes' talk on "Soviet Russia" completely sold out the house, many prospective patrons being turned away because there was no remaining space in which they could be accommodated.

So great has been the public response to this subject that it will be presented for a third time next Sunday night at 8 o'clock, for the benefit of those who have been unable to secure seats for the first two presentations of this highly informative lecture.

The same procedure will be followed next Sunday as yesterday. In the afternoon at 3, the scheduled travelogue on "Alluring Italy" will be presented, with "Soviet Russia" an extra night attraction at 8.

Appears on Loew Screen Today

A sudden change in attractions brings Maxine Doyle to the screen of Loew's Columbia Theater today in the featured feminine role in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's production of "Student Tour," the picture for which she was borrowed from the Warner Brothers. Also prominent in the cast are Charles Butterworth, Jimmy Durante and Monte Blue, Mr. Blue, in addition, being conspicuously cast in "Wagon Wheels."

Mrs. Major to Act.

When "Nobody's Girl" comes to the National Theater on Saturday morning, under the auspices of the Women's International League, Clare Tree Major, director of the Children's Theater of New York, and author of this English dramatic version of the famous French children's classic, "En Famille," will play the part of La Rouquerie.

La Rouquerie is the old rag and bone woman, who bought Palikare, Perrine's beloved little Greek donkey, and, for all that she was a pretty rough character, befriended the lonely little girl.

The role is a small but exacting one. Mrs. Major will bring to it a wealth of experience gained through a number of diversified parts on both the English and American stages.

"Nobody's Girl" is the second offer of the Children's Theater's current season in the Capital.

Late word from the West Coast is to the effect that "The Secret Bride" is the difinite title finally decided upon for the new Warner Brothers' production which heretofore has been known under the working title of "Concealment." This is an item in which Barbara Stanwyck and Warren William have the leading roles.

It is stated further that Donald Woods, former leading man with the National Theater Players, is highly elated over a new Warner Brothers contract, awarded him in recognition of his fine work in "Sweet Adeline," in which he appears with Irene Dunn.

The Savoyards Are Coming.

It is Mark A. Luescher, half of the once flourishing producing firm of Werba & Luescher, who sends along personal word that Richard Collett, general manager of the D'Oyly Carte Opera Co., has determined the plans for the balance of this season of the famous company from the Savoy Theater in London, which terminates its record-making season at the Martin Beck Theater, New York, on December 15, to make way for Katharine Cornell in her New York debut in "Romeo and Juliet," and that this brilliant organization will be heard in Washington later in the season.

Originally, it was intended to play four weeks in New York and then visit Canada and return to England, where the company was scheduled to open for the holidays. But the phenomenal success with which the Savoyards have met on this side has altered that plan.

Postpone Return Home.

The New York engagement has been extended four times and innumerable requests from other cities have caused a postponement of the company's return to England in order that at least a few of the larger American cities may be played on this visit to the United States.

Accordingly, the D'Oyly Carte Company will be given a well-earned rest the week preceding Christmas and then will open at the Forrest Theater, Philadelphia, on Christmas night for a three-week engagement.

Following this will be a limited season in Boston, starting January 14. Other bookings being arranged include the Shubert Theater in New Haven, Conn.; Ford's in Baltimore; the National, in Washington, and succeeding bookings in Pittsburgh, Toronto and Montreal.

Patricia Bowman, Washington's brilliant classic dancer who began her career as a member of the old St. Patrick Players, under the guidance of the late Father Francis Hurney, has written a book on the art to which she has dedicated her professional activities. It will be on the bookstands, I am given to believe, about the middle of the present month—just in time for you to give it to all your friends for a Christmas present. That is, of course, providing they have not already got a book!

New Pictures in Prospect.

Encouraging bulletins relative to the screen fare to which the Capital may look forward come to hand from both the Warner and the Loew interests in Washington.

Six features, one learns, are currently before the cameras at Warners' Burbank studios and 11 are being prepared for early production. The six in work include, Kay Francis and George Brent in "Living on Velvet;" Barbara Stanwyck in "North Shore;" Paul Muni in "Black Fury;' James Cagney and Pat O'Brien in "Devil Dogs of the Air;" Rudy Vallee in "Sweet Music" and an all-star cast in "Gold Diggers of 1935.'

Heading the list of those in preparation are Reinhardt's production of Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and Al Jolson's "Go Into Your Dance," with vehicles for practically all of the Warner stars trailing along behind.

December at Loews.

The Loew promise for December embraces Joan Crawford, Clark Gable and Robert Montgomery in "Forsaking All Others," a picturization of the play which Tallulah Bankhead opened in Washington two or three seasons ago; Mady Christians' first American vehicle, "A Wicked Woman;" "The Band Plays On," a new story with a football background, and a Carole Lombard-Chester Morris picture, "The Gay Bride," adapted from Charles Francis Coe's story of "Repeal."

With all this ahead of you, what is there to worry about, barring possibly taxes, what to use for credit at Christmas time, the broken down plumbing system and the hole in the sole of your left shoe?

Idle Curiosity Note.

I've often wondered, by the way, whether, if taxes fell due on Halloween, they would necessarily have to be known as tick-taxes?

Easy with the club, officer, I'm not resisting.

Gayety

"HOT PEPPER." Independent Burlesque Association production in two acts and 18 scenes, with Hap Freyer, Clyde Bates, Jack Hunt, Don Trent, Conny Ryan, Tom Patricola, jr., Wilma Horner, Sally O'Day, Boots Rush, Miss Juno and Nadja. Book by Gus Fiagg; staged by Frank Bryant. Reviewed Sunday matinee by W. A. Whitney.

Oh, papa, that woman's back again! Meaning, of course, that the Russian sensation of a short month ago—Nadja, the ebullient—has returned for another week to regale the patrons of Col. Jimmy Lake's Home of Hedonics with a varied array of exotic dance routines and songs.

Not only is Nadja back, but she makes the earlier critical ecomiums seem positively funeral. She is even better than was apparent on the occasion of her debut. She sings with a charming accent—but her dancing is without nationality—or, better, quite understandable in any language! Every little movement, and there are many, has not one, but several meanings all their own, and they all converge on the one fact that Nadja is quite the mistress of her art.

Crowned with Comedians.

The "Hot Pepper" revue has been prodigally supplied with comedians, all of whom are aces high with Gayety audiences. Hap Freyer heads the list. Then come Clyde Bates and Jack Hunt, who, while teaming as the famed Bates and Hunt duo, are even more hilarious when playing separately. Working the straight parts are Don Trent and Conny Ryan, who also furnishes the tenorizing.

Complementing the performance of Nadja are Sally O'Day and Wilma Horner, of whose revelatory specialties little need be said except that they are worthy to be included on this bill of excellent performances.

Miss Juno adds a creditable soprano to many of the scenes, and Boots Rush is the engaging soubrette. Tom Patricola, jr., emulates his namesake with several fast, furious tap dances.

Certain it is that "Hot Pepper" will not disappoint.

Burton Holmes Devotes Third Talk to Spain

All but Satiates Audience With Beauties of Land at the National.

"ALL OVER SPAIN." Third of a series of five travel talks delivered by Burton Holmes in the National Theater on Sunday afternoons at 3. Illustrations by Burton Holmes; coloring by Mildred Petry. Motion pictures by Andre Lavarre; projection by Merritt M. Mitchell. "SOVIET RUSSIA" repeated last night at 8.

By Nelson B. Bell.

It is to be doubted that any travel talk in his current series will so completely live up to its title as Burton Holmes' "All Over Spain," delivered yesterday afternoon in the National Theater.

Not only did Mr. Holmes cover all of the principal cities of Spain and Catalonia, the monasteries, cathedrals and hostelries that dot the land, but he also took time to cross over into Africa and examine the territory over which Spain still holds sway and to make a brief expedition into the tiny Republic of Andorra, lying between Spain and France and numbering a total population of 5,000 with a capital in which only 500 persons are resident.

A Modern Madrid.

The speaker revealed Madrid as a thoroughly modern metropolis, boasting many fine buildings that are "skyscrapers," as continental buildings go, and a degree of traffic congestion that is utterly metropolitan. The plaza del toros, or bull ring, he permitted his audience to discover, is productive of much comedy as well as a full measure of tragedy for both man and beast. While in the mood of sports, he dwelt momentarily upon the speed and hazards of pelota, known on this side of the Atlantic as jai jalai.

Then followed visits to the galleries housing the paintings of Spain's most celebrated artists—Velasquez, El Greco (with a visit to his country home, now a memorial, a little later on), Goya and Zuloaga; the Castle of Coca, Avila, Salamanca, with a pause to watch a bewitching young thing by the name of Goyita dance; the huge statue of the Christ that marks the geographical and mathematical center of Spain; the imprints of Moorish, Saracenic and Roman civilizations, Toledo, Barcelona, Trujillo, Seville, a new view of Gibraltar, Palma de Majorca, Cadiz, Cordova, Granada, the Alhambra, the impressive observance of Corpus Christi Day in Granada; Valencia, Monserrat, Spanish Navarre and the mad goings-on during a five-day July festival in Pamplona. These are only the highlights of a tour that indulges in many deviations from the usual tourist routes and goes into a minute scrutiny of the entire Spanish domain, its people and their customs.

Isabella and Columbus.

Particular interest attached to the palaces and sarcophagi of Ferdinand and Isabella, the dwelling place and haunts of Christopher Columbus and the final resting place of the mortal remains of the discoverer of America.

The talk ended on an hilariously comic note in the bull ring at Pamplona, where hundreds of ambitious amateur toreadors gave six wild bulls scant opportunity to do them injury.

Last night at 8, Mr. Holmes repeated his "Soviet Russia," with which the series opened on November 18 and which was fully reviewed in these columns on Monday, November 19. As on the occasion of its first presentation, this subject drew an audience that tested the capacity of the National last night.

Baltimore Girl Who Bit Thermometer Is Better

Baltimore, Dec. 3 (AP).—Three-year-old Lavinia Holland, who bit into a clinical thermometer while playing with it and swallowed some of the fluid, today was reported recovering at a hospital.

Antidotes were administered and physicians said she apparently suffered no ill effects other than running a "slight temperature."

Straight From the Studios

Jack Haley Is Signed to Aid Career of Alice Faye; Frances Dee Returns to Screen in 'Becky Sharp;' Hollywood Long-Shots and Close-ups.

By Edwin Schallert.

Hollywood, Dec. 2.—Jack Haley, the comic, has been obtained for the leading role opposite Alice Faye in "Nymph Errant," which purposes to further the career of this young lady. If the picture turns out well, Haley also may remain with Fox.

FRANCES DEE.

About a year ago, he was sought for George White's "Scandals," but the deal fell through because of other engagements. The last picture that Haley made was "Here Comes the Groom." He also played in "Sitting Pretty" with Jack Oakie.

Webb Lured West.

Clifton Webb's name is quite well known on New York's Broadway, where he has demonstrated his song talents for fully 20 years, and he has now been signed by M-G-M for a musical production, as yet undecided. Also he is being considered for "The Life of Johann Strauss," whenever that is produced with Jeanette MacDonald.

Now It's Ice Rink.

One success always calls for a follow-up, so we find Charles Rogers planning one for "Seventy Thousand Witnesses," the mystery story concerning the sudden death of a player on a football field. The follow-up production will deal with ice hockey.

It is a story called "Crimson Ice," written by Rex Deane and Cortland Fitzsimmons, and probably will feature Cary Grant. Arrangements are under way to obtain the Toronto hockey team to appear in the picture.

Miss Dee Returns To the Studios.

Frances Dee is returning to the screen and from all indications her first role will be a costume role, as Amelia, in "Becky Sharp," starring Miriam Hopkins. Miss Dee was last seen in "Of Human Bondage," with Leslie Howard. Then she temporarily deserted the screen while a third member was added to the Dee-Joel McCrea family.

Slim Gets Break.

Slim Summerville and ZaSu Pitts having embarked on separate careers, their courses have been followed with interest. ZaSu has been faring somewhat better than Slim since the separation, but now Summerville gets an excellent chance in Will Rogers' production, "Life Begins at Forty." Work starts on the picture this week.

For the Sake Of Art.

Genevieve Tobin is having no end of trouble in connection with her work in "North Shore," the Barbara Stanwyck picture. Miss Tobin is accompanied to the studio each morning by a doctor, who has to take bandages off her arm and shoulder while she is before the camera.

You may recall she sustained injuries in a recent automobile accident. Nevertheless, she is going right ahead and will start work shortly on the "The Goose and the Gander."

Film Pageant In Review.

George Brent will play the lead in "Oil for the Lamps of China" and there is talk of Claudette Colbert replacing Josephine Hutchinson. Brent is finishing his role in "Living on Velvet."

The Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt case may be dramatized for the screen, although naturally it will be adapted with considerable freedom. Charles Kenyon is doing the job.

The talk is that Marion Davies will play the role of Hippolyta in "Midsummer Night's Dream," the one unfilled part of any special consequence in the Max Reinhardt production for Warner Brothers.

'Lifer' Asks Writ Seventeenth Time

Claims Plea in Murder Trial Was Improperly Heard.

Baltimore, Dec. 3 (AP).—Louis Berman, serving a life sentence in the Maryland Penitentiary for first degree murder, today filed his seventeenth habeas corpus application in his fight for freedom.

The application was filed with Judge J. Frank Supplee, newly elected member of the Baltimore Supreme Court, who set a hearing on the case for Saturday.

Berman, who bases his pleas on a claim his insanity plea was not properly heard, was convicted in 1928 of the killing of Clifton S. Brown, his former attorney.

Protective Committee's Bond Claim Approved

The Securities and Exchange Commission has approved the registration statement of a bondholders' protective committee, which is requesting the deposit of $20,000,000 Republic of Cuba bonds now in default, according to the Associated Press.

The committee is the independent bondholders committee for the Republic of Cuba, and it is headed by Senator Bronson Cutting, with Senator Burton K. Wheeler as associate counsel. The bonds are part of a $40,000,000 5½ per cent sinking fund to mature in 1945.

Seibert, Ex-Sheriff, Dies at Hagerstown

Hagerstown, Md., Dec. 3 (AP).—M. Finley Seibert, former sheriff of Washington County and member of a prominent family, died at his home here last night following a stroke of paralysis. He was 78.

Seibert was a vice president and director of the Nicodemus National Bank and a former member of the Washington County board. His wife, four sons and a daughter survive him.

Belasco

Before a large and enthusiastic audience, the Circolo Filodrammatico Italiano last night presented S. Camasio and N. Oxilia's three-act comedy, "Addio Giovinezza" (Farewell to Youth) as a benefit performance for poor Italian families of Washington. Assisting in the evening's festivities, N. Cosentino, radio and opera tenor, and Iris Mazzarini, soprano, formerly of La Scala, offered selections from Italian operas and folk songs.

The drama was commendably acted, with Tosca Fattorini and L. R. Baronello in the principal roles, supported by Josephine Pisani, Leonora Palermo, Grace Martorello, Amelia Fagiolo, Olga Fattorini, F. Colaprico, J. Lazzari, V. Bruno, F. Campanella, and F. Marchetti.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Don Cossack Russian Male Chorus; Sergei Jarov, conductor. Constitution Hall, Sunday afternoon. Miscellaneous program of Russian choral music.

In numbers and in enthusiasm, Sunday's audience was to all intents and purposes a duplicate of the one that welcomed the Russian choristers one year before, almost to the day. What may have been their reception on previous visits to Washington, this reviewer is not in a position to say, but it was doubtless much the same. The quality of their singing is such that only the tone-deaf could be unresponsive.

One factor in effective choral work is the conviction of the singers that what they are doing is worth doing to the best of their ability or not at all, and another is precision of attack at the conductor's signal. These Kazaks, whether they be from the Don or the Dnieper, sing as though their lives were at stake for every note they utter, and their attack has the snap of the parade ground. Moreover, their extraordinary range of tone and dynamics places them in a category of their own.

In the opening group of liturgical music by Kastalski, Wedel, Chaikovski and Grechaninov, to which was added for good measure the familiar supplication. "Gospodi, Pomilui," the singers displayed that notable organ-like richness of massed tone that is traditionally characteristic of Russian church choirs. The impressive dignity of these devotional chants and the urgency of emotional expression were admirable.

In the remainder of the program there was a variety of secular moods to suit all tastes from grave to gay; songs of nostalgic yearning, of festivity, of romance and of grim realities. To them all these singers brought an irresistible vitality in interpretation, and a scale of timbres from a bass diapason to a wraith of tenor falsetto. Their ability to sustain tones, whether in fortissimo or pianissimo, is remarkable.

A composer writing a chorus to be sung a cappella has in mind a vocal instrument rather than the separate voices. Sometimes the instrumental effect fails because of weakness in the component choirs, or because of unsymmetrical blending. These Russian choristers are so expert in tonal balance and shading that they should inspire many a composer to write expressly for them.

South's Business Seen on Upswing

Baltimore Business Man Holds Tide Turned.

Baltimore, Dec. 3 (AP).—A business revival throughout the South with money more plentiful and spending liberal was reported today by F. Highlands Burns, Baltimore business man, just back from a tour of the section.

"The general opinion is that the tide has turned definitely, and that a firm foundation for prosperity has been established in the South," said Burns with the comment that "six months ago there was an artificiality in the sentiment but today it is different."

"Farmers particularly have been benefited," he said. "They have more real dollars in their possession than they have had for many years."

Nice to Hold Own Inquiry On Road Unit

Governor-Elect Seeks to Discover 'Real Facts' of Commission.

$1,494,000 Figure for Work on Highways Is Announced.

Baltimore, Dec. 3 (AP).—Gov.-elect Harry W. Nice said today he plans an independent investigation into the financial condition of the State Roads Commission "to find out for myself the real situation."

Nice, who has just returned from a vacation in Florida, announced he would not indulge in further discussion of the commission's condition until his investigation was completed.

In the meantime, a report of William A. Codd, commission auditor, placed the roads funds for construction and maintenance for the year ending next September 30 at $1,494,000 less than was available last year.

Figures on Gas Tax.

That figure, Codd explained, was based on the expectation that income derived from the State gasoline tax will be the same for the current fiscal year as for the one just ended.

Under the economy program which has been instituted, Codd said, the commission's monthly pay rolls, formerly about $270,000, would be cut to $105,000 and a saving of $81,314 will be effected in materials and other items each month.

As a part of the stringent economy move, Harry D. Williar, jr., chief engineer of the commission, said the exact number of laborers dismissed was 1,312. The remaining laborers, totaling 2,188, he said, have been placed on a part-time basis of from 27 to 36 hours a week.

Employes Furloughed.

In addition to the laborers, Williar said 45 inspectors, 12 draftsmen, 20 survey men, six right of way examiners, and two members of the commission's clerical staff have been furloughed.

One item usually included in the roads commission budget—$400,000 for snow removal—has been eliminated this year, Williar said, admitting that in the event of an exceptionally heavy snow, special measures would have to be taken to clear the highways. Ordinary snowfall could be cleared, he said.

Williar denied reports that the State highways, as distinguished from county roads, were to be allowed to fall into disrepair as a result of the economy program.

There would be no need for such extensive repairs on these roads, he said, as would prevent the commission from keeping them in usable condition.

Commenting on the possibility of a heavy snowfall impeding traffic on the highways, Gov.-elect Nice said the highways would be kept safe for traffic during the winter months "regardless of the financial condition of the State Roads Commission."

Return of Road Control To Counties Demanded

Easton, Md., Dec. 3 (AP).—Legislative action to have responsibility for debt service and road maintenance returned to the counties was indicated today as the result of a meeting here of the Association of County Commissioners of the Eastern Shore.

The association again went on record as favoring the abolishment of the office of county tax assessor, eliminating this officer's appointment by and responsibility to the State tax commission and shifting the duties to the various boards of county commissioners.

Representatives of the nine Shore counties took no definite action on the roads situation, reserving final decision until the roads commission's auditor had made his final statement on county overdrafts and allotments.

The possibility of repealing the last legislative act by which the commission took over county debt service and road maintenance was discussed by members of the House of Delegates and State senators who met with the commission.

While no action was taken along this line, a definite sentiment of returning these responsibilities to the counties was expressed.

About 75 persons attended the meeting, which was preceded by a luncheon.

Four Set Free After Plea on Strike Battle

Cases of Eight Others Are Continued in Berkeley County Court.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Dec. (Spl.). Four of 12 Martinsburg men indicted by the Berkeley County grand jury in October for assault upon nonstrikers during industrial trouble at textile mills here pleaded nolo contendere with consent of counsel and court to a substituted charge of assault and battery when arraigned in circuit court.

They were assessed the costs but Judge Decatur H. Rodgers suspended the penalties upon condition of their good behavior during the coming years.

The men entered not guilty pleas to the indictments. The cases affected were Royal Files, Clyde Young and Jack Frazer, all indicted for felonious assault. Charles Onderdonk was indicted for a misdemeanor.

The cases of the eight other men were continued to a future term of court. Additional veniremen were being called for service tomorrow, in anticipation of trial of the cases, when the action was taken.

The men were represented by counsel, with Prosecuting Attorney Herbert E. Hannis appearing for the State.

Charities Board For Maryland To Meet Today

Two-Year Appropriations to 125 Institutions to Be Considered.

Baltimore, Dec. 3 (AP).—Appropriations to approximately 125 State-aided institutions for the two-year period beginning October 1, 1935, will be considered at a preliminary meeting of the Board of State Aid and Charities here tomorrow.

The board, headed by Samuel S. Shannahan, will prepare its budget for 1935-37, subject to the approval of Governor-elect Harry W. Nice, who will confer with the group Wednesday and Thursday regarding the appropriations.

For the two-year period ending September 30, 1935, the State Charities Unit appropriated $1,128,550 for State-aided institutions and $3,510,-191 for State institutions.

The largest items included $452,-550 for hospitals; $306,350 for educational institutions, and $213,975 for the care of children.

False Teeth? Huh! 84-Year-Old Miner Cuts His Third Set

Clarksburg, W. Va., Dec. 3 (Spl.). Plans for a new set of false teeth have been abandoned by George H. Coburn, 84-year-old retired mine foreman of Everson, because he is cutting a third set. Dentists say the new set is as good as either of his former two regular sets.

Coburn, who is in robust health, is not a bit fussy about his new teeth and smilingly says its a part of the New Deal.

Old Dominion Will Stop Building Roads When They Are No Longer Economically Justified, Commissioner Shirley Says.

By Warren A. McNeill.

This is the seventh of a series of articles describing the functions of the Virginia State government and how State department heads view these functions.

Richmond, Va., Dec. 3 (AP).—Admitting the theoretical advantage of good roads and assuming that they are worth what they cost to construct, just where is all this program of highway building to end?

Asked this question, Commissioner H. G. Shirley expressed the view that a time would come, though it is not yet in sight, when building of more roads would not be economically justified.

"Whenever we reach the point that building a road will not save money for those who use it, and must pay for it, we will stop building," Mr. Shirley said. "But until that point is reached we do not feel that gas taxes or automobile license taxes should be diverted to other purposes. In fact, it would be fairer to take some road money from those other than automobile owners who benefit from them. Hotels in many cases owe their very existence to tourist traffic which is dependent on good roads and filling stations and most places of business located on improved roads also could well afford to pay part of the road costs."

Increase in Traffic.

Increased traffic, he pointed out, naturally means increased revenues from gasoline and license taxes but it also means increased maintenance costs and heavier travel along with higher speeds are making necessary more expensive types of construction.

"This department has been criticized," he said, "for not building more permanent types of roads in some cases but our oiling program has more than justified its use so far.

"When I came to Virginia in 1922 the State highway system consisted of a lot of disconnected roads and our first job seemed to be to connect them; to make it possible for a man to get from Southwest to Tidewater Virginia, from the northern to the southern borders or from one of the cities to another without difficulty.

"When we first started oil-treating roads, they were more permanent than we thought. Today some of the oiled roads are carrying 10,000 vehicles and the end isn't in sight yet. They may carry up to as high as 20,000 or 25,000 vehicles a day.

Saving in Interest.

"It's true that these roads wear out and have to be resurfaced, but interest on the money saved building this type of road as compared with a more expensive type would almost take care of the extra maintenance. And, in the meantime, the public has had use of about three times the mileage that would have been built with the same money in permanent roads. The biggest drawback is the inconvenience to those who have to use the roads while they are being re-oiled and resurfaced."

Demand for improved roads continues to come from all parts of the State, Mr. Shirley said, with those who have to use the bad roads calling for good ones, while those who already have their roads want lower taxes.

Low Construction Costs.

Sections with low construction costs naturally have received more mileage, he said, but no one part of the State can justly claim much larger appropriations than others, because of high construction costs. The expense of making deep cuts and fills or bridging gorges and streams in mountainous country is balanced by high cost of big bridges over large rivers in the tidewater area and the heavy expense of bridging or filling over swampy areas.

(In the eighth article of this series to be published by The Post on Thursday, organization of the highway department and some of its less known functions are described.)

Fight Made On Increase In Rail Rate

Would Hurt Railroads, Trade, Agriculture, Virginians Say.

Hearing Told Trucks Are Reducing Carriers' Business.

A loud cry against the railroad's proposal to scale up their freight rates on a long list of commodities was raised today by Virginia interests, according to the Associated Press.

A stream of witnesses from the Old Dominion told the Interstate Commerce Commission a freight charge increase would hurt, not help, the railroads, besides delivering a blow to industry and agriculture.

They said motor trucks already have made inroads on the railroad's business and that boosting of freight rates would cut down the already declining rail traffic. At the same time, they said, Virginia factories and farms with markets outside the State, would suffer from "localization" of commerce due to the increased transportation costs.

Export Loss Predicted.

The export business, notably in apples and paint pigments, they predicted would lose what ever advantage it now has in foreign fields due to the United States going off the gold standard. It was this country's dropping of gold as the money standard, they said, that permitted the American seller to stay in the foreign field and any burden added to exports now would undo the good just recently felt.

On top of these things, they said, there was no showing that the Chesapeake & Ohio, the Norfolk & Western, the Virginian and the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac, which operate in Virginia, were in need of additional revenue.

Several witnesses said they felt that present rates, principally those on coal from Virginia-West Virginia mines to Virginia points, are too high and that instead of increasing them they should be lowered.

The Virginia witnesses were drawn from many lines of endeavor, but all their testimony was built around the theme that harm to all, including the railroads which propose the increases, would result from commission approval of rate boosts.

Figures were offered for various commodities to show how trucks have gradually edged in on the railroads' business.

Figures Presented.

This was shown to be true particularly of agricultural products. Henry M. Taylor, of the State Department of Agriculture, testified that in 1926, 5.5 per cent of the commercial production of apples moved by truck, but in 1933 the truck movement of this farm product was 57 per cent. Like figures were presented for cattle, sheep and lambs.

Trucking of vegetables and fruits from the Virginia eastern shore was said by C. R. Walters, sales manager of the Seaboard Produce Distributors, and L. F. Purvis, traffic manager of the Eastern Shore of Virginia Produce Exchange, to be becoming more prevalent.

Those two witnesses made a particular protest against the proposal of the carriers to increase rates on potatoes from Virginia to North Atlantic markets while allowing the rates from Maine, the Old Dominion's big potato competitor, to stand.

The localization of commerce as a prospective result of the increases was predicted by W. B. Jester, of the D. Pender Grocery Co. and affiliates. He said such a development would give the independent merchants an advantage over chain stores such as Pender operates.

Furniture Makers Object.

The protest against increasing the cost of shipping coal came from T. D. Geoghegan, appearing for the State corporation commission and several local chambers of commerce; C. G. Holland, president of the Danville Chamber of Commerce, and W. W. Berry, president of the Harrisonburg Chamber of Commerce.

Furniture manufacturers of the Martinsville-Bassett district entered opposition to the increases through O. D. Ford, Martinsville furniture manufacturer. E. T. Mankin, of Richmond, Richmond brick manufacturer, said rates on the commodity he ships already are too high.

The effect of dropping the gold standard by the United States was discussed by E. D. Gregory, president of the American Pigment Corporation, of Bedford, and W. S. Campfield, of Staunton, secretary of the Virginia State Horticultural Society. O. J. McSwain, of Richmond, testified for the Virginia Manufacturers Associations.

Canoe Outspeeds Auto, in Dash on Swollen Potomac

Frederick, Md., Dec. 3 (AP).—The story of a hair-raising canoe trip down the rain-swollen Potomac River was recounted here today as Frederick County surveyed its week-end flood damage.

Dashing perilously down the flooded stream from Harpers Ferry to Point of Rocks yesterday in the frail craft, Ralph G. Kline and John Ebert, of this city, saw entire summer cottages floating along, furniture and other contents intact inside, they reported.

Almost swamped several times by the lashing current, the two said they made the canoe trip 3 minutes quicker than a companion in an automobile traveling 40 miles an hour over State highways. So far as was known here, it was the first time, at least in recent years, that the distance has been negotiated in a canoe. Rocks and rapids make the trip impossible when the Potomac is at low water mark.

Kent to Appeal His Conviction Of Kidnaping

Counsel Will Claim Body of Mrs. Hastings Was Not Identified in Va.

Richmond, Va., Dec. 3 (AP).—Edward T. Haynes, counsel for Robert C. Kent, jr., now serving a 13-year prison term for the kidnaping of Mrs. Mary J. Hastings, of Blue Ridge Springs, Va., today announced a continued fight for Kent's freedom.

Haynes said an appeal would be made on the grounds that the body found near Stroudsburg, Pa., never had been identified in Virginia as that of Mrs. astinHgs.

e said Mrs. astings left Roanoke with Kent one night to drive to Washington and that they stopped en route at Lexington, where she had ample opportunity to inform some one that she was being kidnaped; that they reached Washington the following morning and parted there several days before the body was found in Pennsylvania. Kent claims he did not see the woman after taking her to Washington.

Cooksey Estate Victor in Row Over Insurance

Supreme Court Ruling Involves $4,500 Policy on Virginia Man.

The estate of Benjamin F. Cooksey, of Charlottesville, Va., won in the Supreme Court today in a controversy with the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York over a $4,500 life insurance policy, the Associated Press reported.

Cooksey died in January, 1932. A premium was due on the policy in November, 1931, but was not paid. The policy provided it should remain in effect in the event Cooksey became totally and permanently disabled.

The company refused to pay the insurance on the ground Cooksey had failed to notify it within the time allowed in the policy of disability and insisted the policy had lapsed.

The Federal District Court for Western Virginia held the policy had been cancelled, but was reversed by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, which held the insurance was in effect at the time of Cooksey's death.

The appellate court took the position Cooksey's disability had rendered it impossible for him to give the notice required concerning his total and permanent disability and declared Cooksey's failure to give such notice under these circumstances excused him from notifying the company.

Plan to Stop Convict Road Work Flayed

Virginia Prison Heads Say Move Would Cost $1,500,000.

Hold Shirley's Proposal Would Add to Penal Problems.

Richmond, Dec. 3 (AP).—Prison officials today entered the discussion of the advisability of doing away with convict road forces, asserting that such a move would cost the State $1,500,000 to begin with and that convict road work does not increase the State's unemployment problem.

H. G. Shirley, State highway commissioner, had pointed out that he has in prospect less than $100,000 for construction work on the primary road system next year and suggested that relieving the highway department of the $3,000,000 annual burden of maintaining the convict road forces would simplify the problem of matching Federal appropriations of more than $2,000,000 which will be available for construction in Virginia only if matched with State funds.

Cites Loss to State.

Maj. Rice M. Youell, State prison superintendent, said today that prisoners are not permitted to work on road projects on which Federal funds are expended and that they do not take labor away from free workmen. He said the average pay of a day laborer is $3 and that of maintaining a convict road worker for a day only 70 cents.

Maj. Youell added that junking the convict road camp system would mean loss to the State of large amounts spent for camps and equipment and "not only would a change in the system be a great expense to the State, but it would raise a serious problem of keeping the convicts employed. It is impracticable to put 2,600 prisoners to work on farms."

Opposed by Cottrell.

Walker C. Cottrell, chairman of the State prison board, also expressed opposition to Mr. Shirley's suggestion, calling highway construction work an ideal way to provide employment for convicts and saying if this were abandoned it would be necessary to purchase several farms for prison use at a probable cost of between $1,000,000 and $1,500,000.

He also described the road work system as in line with the "State use" convict employment policy approved by the General Assembly and State prison board and said their withdrawal would create additional penal problems.

The girl was shot after spending the night with the Johnson family. Police quoted Johnson as having said that he was "crazy" about the girl, was afraid he would lose her and had lost his head.

Johnson is a married man. His wife, Mrs. Betty Johnson, and her 14-year-old brother, Clayton Morgan, were at the Johnson apartment when the shooting occurred.

Pond Regime Approved By Yale

Entire Coaching Staff Given Assignment for 1935.

Victories Over Tigers, Games Support of Allumni.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Dec. 3 (AP).—Yale okayed the year-old coaching regime of Raymond W. (Ducky) Pond today by reappointing the entire football staff for 1935.

In contrast to the storm that preceded the shake-up after the poor 1933 season, the decision to retain Pond and his associates was announced in a brief statement.

The official announcement merely served to confirm what Eli supporters had predicted generally since the Blue scored a surprising 7-to-0 victory over Princeton, to shove the Tigers out of the ranks of the unbeaten and untied elevens.

Besides Pond, the varsity staff which piloted the Elis to the "big three" championship and to victories over Brown, Dartmouth and Pennsylvania, consisted of Earle (Greasy) Neale, Denny Myers and Ivan B. Williamson.

Reggie Root, Pand's predecessor as head coach, will remain in charge of the freshman squad, while Stewart Scott was reappointed junior varsity coach.

In the absence of any statement from Yale officials as to the terms under which the coaching staff has been retained, it was generally assumed that the reappointments were for one year.

Pond, former Eli gridiron and baseball star, was named head coach last January in the midst of a great hue and cry from any alumni for the abandonment by Yale of its traditional policy of graduate coaching. The unversity decided in favor of tradition, but went outside the alumni ranks for Pond's chief associates.

Neale, one of the Nation's outstanding gridiron strategists, and Myers, line coach, were brought here from West Virginia. Williamson came from Michigan to take charge of the ends.

Scrapping the Notre Dame system of play, Pond directed Yale through one of the most strenuous campaigns ever undertaken by a Blue eleven. The team, without a "brather" game on its schedule, was beaten only by Army, Columbia and Georgia.

The Elis face a campaign for 1935 almost as formidable as this year's. New Hampshire will replace Columbia as the opeing opponent, but from then on the Elis will meet Pennsylvania, Navy, Army, Dartmouth, Brown, Harvard and Princeton. An open Saturad betwene the Brown and Harvard games is expected to make things a little easier.

Beaver Seeking Bout With Dusek

Husky Matman Will Work Here Thursday Night.

A replica of those Rudy Dusek-Chief White Feather rassling battles of a few years ago may materialize if Rudy and Little Beaver survive their respective assignments at the Washington Auditorium Thursday night.

Paired off with George Meske in main support of Dusek and Vic Christy, Beaver has issued a wide open challenge to Rudy in the event both emerge victorious.

Whereas Rudy long has been established as a champion rough matman here, Beaver has risen in the ranks mightily during the past six months, his tendency to mix fisticuffs with rassling has earned him widespread recognition throughout the East.

Boussus Named Net Ace of France

Paris, Dec. 3 (U.P.).—Christian Boussus, frail, left-handed player, today was placed at the No. 1 ranking position of French tennis stars. 1934 rankings, issued by the French Lawn Tennis Association, were notable in that the newest list failed to include the name of JJean Borotra, the basque who once helped France maintain a long tenure on the Davis Cup.

Joe Turner Scouts For Four Opponents

Joe Turner, local promoter of ring sports, left yesterday for New York to attempt to sign Tony Canzoneri or Eddie (Kid) Wolfe to fight Phil Furr in a ten-round main event at the Auditorium December 15.

Turner's main objective will be to sign Canzoneri, but should he be unable to book the former lightweight champion, he will sign up Wolfe, who is understood to be ready to make his ring debut here.

Borries' Fifth

Navy Star Breaks Record for Athletic Awards.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Dec. 3 (Spl.).—Fred (Buzz) Borries, Navy's back field ace, will receive his fifth "N star" breaking an all-time record for the academy. This coveted award goes to all Midshipmen who share in victory over their Army rivals.

Prior to Saturday's game at Philadelphia, Borries was tied with Ira McKee, crack athlete of more than a dozen years ago, who has since resigned the service. Also Borries is believed to be the only representative of either institution to figure in three victories over the other within a year. The Buzzer will have the opportunity to run his "N star" honors up to seven, as he faces Army again on the basket ball court, he being captain of the Navy quint, and also as a member of the baseball team of which he is an outfielder.

In addition to Borries, the coveted "N star" will go to 19 other gridders as a result of Saturday's game. The recipients will be Capt. Dick Burns, Dave Zabriskie, Rivers Morrell, Ken Schacht, Ray Vogel and Otis Cole, all guards; Slade Cutter, George Lambert and Len Baird, tackles; Bob Dornin, Bob Mandlekorn, Gordon Schechter and Dick Bull, ends; Lou Robertshaw, center; Bill Clark, Tom King, Dick Pratt and Holman Lee, backs.

Extra Tilts Held An Injustice To Players

After All, Education Is Colleges' Aim, Says Big Ten Leader.

CINCINNNATI, Ohio, Dec. 3 (AP).—Football fans may roar with enthusiasm for colorful post-season football games, but in the opinion of the Big Ten's commissioner of athletes, it's a serious injustice to the players involved.

Maj. John L. Griffith, of Chicago, sometimes described as the "Judge Landis" of Western Conference sports, explained his views as he arrived here today to address a football meeting at the University of Cincinnati.

"From the standpoint of conserving the best interests of the students who play football, I would not change the rule that bars Big Ten teams from playing post-season games either for charity or the Rose Bowl," Maj. Griffith said.

Not Good for Players.

"As a fan, I would, of course, enjoy seeing our champion Minnesota team play in the Rose Bowl New Year's Day. That would be great for the spectators and sportsmen, but it wouldn't be so good for the student players.

"The most important thing in universities is education. Important as football may be to the player-student, yet that is not the prime objective of their going through the university. The main purpose is to get an education and we must look upon football activities in this larger and broader sense.

"If we permitted one team to go to the West after the close of the regular season, other teams would be invited to play in the South and the East. Soon we would have 300 students giving an extra month of their school year to football.

Big Ten Vote Taken.

"We have found that it is best to agree in the Big Ten on limiting the football season within definite dates, so we agreed to open the training season not earlier than September 15 and close the season on the Saturday before Thanksgiving.

"I took a vote among Big Ten players, and found 85 per cent favored a season of eight games or less. So we have a season of eight conference games, and at its close the players are pretty well tired out. It would be an injustice to them from an educational standpoint to prolong the season another month or more."

Rich and Poor Alike Stare at Bike Racers

By Jimmy Powers.
(Pinch-Hitting for Paul Gallico.)

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—We came up through the floor of Madison Square Garden at a point where but one night before the skates of Ching Johnson, New York Ranger hickey defense, had carved crystal hieroglyphics. We pushed through the massed infield, blinking from the glare of floodlights on white pine. There was a steady clatter of beer bottles, and the singing of coffee urns, great silver cylinders that wore aromatic plumes of steam.

As we passed the bunting-draped stand the colored orchestra burst into a rhumba and the wand-waving leader began to scream to himself, "yeah man! 'At's hot! Ummmmhummm." When the din subsided we caught a fainter, finer music, the steady purr, purr, purr of silken tires and the overtone, th sharp clicking of sprockets. Around and around, and hypnotizing the eyes of 16,000 fans skittered the Coney Island serpentine of New York's fifty-seventh six-day bicycle race.

Bazaar in Miniature.

The gentleman from the Staats-Zeitung accompanied us down the little alley of green canvas booths, a Port Said bazaar in minlature. Flags of distant nations were tacked up bravely at the eaves of each toy house and as we walked we caught garbled French, Belgian and Italian.

At a curtained bunk, we were introduced to a smiling young man in a purple-and-cream jersey. Hans Zims is 26. He is from Cologne and he showed us two gold crosses blessed for him by the priests of the Cathedral of St. George. Hans is a crack road-racer in the old country. He won the 24-hour race in Nancy, France, two years ago, beating the famed Buschenhagen.

Resembles Penner.

Hans resembles a certain duck-hunting comedian. We said as much. Hans did not understand. The Staats-Zeitung man amicably translated "Du siehst aus wie Penner." (You are like Penner.) Instantly the broad Zims brow furrowed in anger. Steel-blue eyes flashed. "Du bist wohl vom lahmen affen gebissen." (You have been bit byp a lame monkey; you're crazy.) Our hero then stormed about the wooden runway, banging his stable of pet wheels. The Staats-Zeitung man explained patiently. "Penner" in German means an inebriated tramp. Penner in English means a great stage and radio star; we were sorry, really, no offense intended. Hans was partly mollified, but before we left he said he thought it was stupid for the citizen of any country to submit to any such silly surname.

He shook his handsome Teuton head over it all. It wasn't until we had clambered back onto the plank platform of the press box that the incident struck us in its true light. There,pedaling madly on his seat-chafing saddle, whirls a six-day bike rider and he thinks we are crazy.

Field Too Wet, Stars Delay Practice

Capital Lads, However, to Begin Drills Tonight for Alabamans.

THE District All-Stars can't take it. They don't even want it, and they said as much yesterday after a peek at the water-logged gridiron reposing in Griffith Stadium.

Mons. Jim Pixlee, on whose weary shoulders has been thrust the task of preparing the Washington Stars for Saturday's game with Alabama's greats, wore a wry countenance when he saw the field. Pixlee's had too much mud to suit his fancy in the last two weeks. He doesn't want it, either.

The team will begin practice tonight at 7:30 under the arc lights, mud or no mud, and every night until Friday, when the men will be brought up for air and a tapering-off drill Friday afternoon.

To Have Varied Attack.

Pixlee plans to utilize the available back-field material to the fullest extent. He can build the attack around Johnny Fenlon, whom he developed at G. W.; Tom Whelan, the Catholic U. ace, or Jimmy Dunn, who majored in football at Western Maryland. The attack will have everything—speed, power and deception—with these boys handling the cowhide.

Word comes from Tuscaloosa, where the Southerners are drilling, that Alabama and Auburn have joined forces to send an outstanding eleven to Washington. The schools have not met on the gridiron in 20 years, when a bitter rivalry flared between them.

But Auburn has contributed the services of two varsity men who closed out their collegiate careers this season, Barney Musgrove, cen-

Remember Broshous? He's Filling Jobs Now

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—Remember slim, calm "Hank" Broshous, the drop kicking youngster from Atchison, Kans., who used to come trotting into the Army line-up every time the Cadets scored a touchdown to boot the extra point and then retire?

For three years, ended with his graduation in June of 1933, he annoyed the Army's enemies. He had many great days. He had one that nearly broke his heart, the day Army fought Notre Dame in a sea of mud in Chicago in 1930 when the Cadets blocked a kick in the final minutes for a touchdown and needed one of his perfect drop kicks to tie the score 7 to 7. Hank missed and the Irish won, 7 to 6.

A Reminder for Fleming.

It must have been the swamp of Franklin Field Saturday, when Navy beat Army, 3 to 0, that brought that day in Chicago, and Broshous, back to the mind of major Phil Fleming, the splendid soldier who was Army's director of Athletics then. Fleming is manning a Public Works Administration desk in Washington now.

"You write about these Cadets when they're football heroes, and then forget them when their eral careers—their Army life—starts," chided Feming. "Remember 'Hank' Broshous?

"A year ago today, I was flying an open plane from somewhere in Iowa up to Glasgow, Mont., where the PWA was damming the Missouri River. The man in charge of the place was Lieut. Charles R. Broshous, some three months out of West Point.

"They'd called him down to Washington after he'd finished his graduation leave and outlined this job for him. He had no experience, nothing but technical knowledge, and he was in full charge.

A Job Supplier.

"'The object of the PWA,' they told him, 'is to make jobs—as many as possible. Go out there and clear a dam site. Put people to work. Keep them working. Rtmember, put people to work.'

"Hank saluted, and there I was flying out to see what he had done. There was no radio in the plane. As I landed, and Hank came running across the field, the first thing I asked, of course, was, 'For God's sake, what's the score?'

"'What score?' said Hank. He didn't even know Army and Navy were playing!

"He showed me the job. He had come into that town alone and the first thing he did was rent the entire second floor of the First National Bank Building, the only brick structure in Glasgow. The first week he hired 400 men. In two weeks he had 600 working. The dam site was laid out perfectly. He had built a restaurant to feed the men.

"The trees he cut down had been cut to cord lengths. Then he had t ocut all the wood to stove lengths to keep his little army busy. Then he had it all split. When I got there it was kindling.

"'Lord, major, I'm glad to see you,' he said. 'Another week and this stuff would have been down so fine I'd have had to start a match factory.'

"I had to get one of the laborers to find out for me that Army had beaten Navy 12 to 7."

Harter Wins Cleland Cup

Sports Writers Are Topped by Net 67 Score.

WITH the able assistance of a beneficient handicapper who allotted him 30 strokes and the shaades of night which cloaked most of his strokes on the last nine holes, Bernie Harter, sports editor of the Heraald, won the Cleland Cup golf tournament for sports writers at the Army War College yesterday.

Harter, making his first march over the sporty course, finished one stroke better than John Kingsbury Espey, George Washington's minister of public enlightment on an 18-hole handicaap basis. Despite a relapse into his regular game on the ninth and eighteenth, on which he took eights, Harter wound up the day with a stricken conscience, a charley horse and a score of 50—47—30—67.

Jack Espey, being a very inexperienced participator in events of the kind, did not take advantagae of the darkness, but insisted on light for the last five holes. A candle was provided and he finished on a course illuminated by one candle power and the reflection from John Keller's head. His final score was 46—5—30—68.

Playing from scratch, Maury Fitzgerald, of the Herald, scored 35—34—69. eH was disqualified for using a ball that cost more than 10 cents.

Bob Considine, of the Herald, played around in 90, good spirits and a dashing white, brown and muddy ensemble. Henry Rodier, of the Bulletin, wore a red sweater to keep from being shot for a deer. Dave Herman wor a trench helmet.

New York Hears Perry Joins Pros

Report Declares Net Star Accepts $100,000 Offer.

New York, Dec. 3 (U.P.).—Reports that Fred Perry, England's ace and currently the world's greatest tennis player, had turned professional, were heard today. Queries to London brought denials from Samuel F. Perry, father of the star. Fred is en route to Australia.

The reports said Perry had signed a contract calling for $100,000 payment for a series of movie shorts to be made by the British Lion Film Co.

"The report must have originated with the fact that Fred made one short educational film," Samuel Perry said. "However, I do know that Fred did not sign for any series of pictures."

Robertshaw Named Navy Captain

Pennsylvanian Picked as Leader; Starred at Snavely Prep.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Dec. 3 (Spl.).—Midshipman Louis B. (Bobby) Robertshaw, of Haverford, Pa., class of 1936, will captain the Naval Academy football team in 1935, it was announced today. He was chosen unanimously by the players who participated in the victory over the Army Cadets at Philadelphia Saturday, while returning to Annapolis Sunday.

Robertshaw, who played a brilliant game at center throughout the season, will succeed Richard H. (Dick) Burns, of Willmar, Minn., guard, who is one of seven regulars to be graduated from the Academy next June, J. C. Shaw, of Minneapolis, Minn., was chosen manager.

In naming Robertshaw, the Middies followed a custom established several years ago, that of selecting a lineman for leadership. Three other regulars, classmates of Robertshaw, one lineman and two backs, were eligible for the honor. They are Richard R. Pratt, Washington, D. C., quarter back; Thomas S. King, jr., Annapolis, half back, and David Zabriskie, Hollywood, Calif., guard.

Before coming to Annapolis two years ago, Robertshaw played football at Swavely Prep School. He is 22 years old, weighs 175 pounds, and is 5 feet 11 inches tall. He is a two-letter athlete, being on the varsity baseball team.

Wager Total Up Only at Pimlico

Two of State's Tracks Are Believed to Have Lost Money.

$25,307,790 Chanced at 4 Courses; Largest Drop at Havre.

BALTIMORE, Md., Dec. 3 (Spl.).—Although betting at three of Maryland's major tracks fell off badly during the season which ended last Thursday at Bowie and although at least two of the tracks are believed to have lost money, the business of racing once more will net the State a rich profit.

In all probability the Maryland Racing Commission's report will show that operators of the various tracks have paid into the State Treasury approximately $900,000. Last year the commission's total receipts, including $10,000 reserved from 1932 revenue for 1933 expenses, were $997,900.26.

The yield of 1934 racing to the States is approximated by summing up the license fees and the 1 per cent levy on pari-mutuel betting. Each major track is taxed $6,000 per day by the State, and since there were 100 days of racing on the "big time" ovals, the revenue to the State frim this source is $600,000.

Total betting at the four big tracks—Pimlico, Havre de Grace, Bowie and Laurel—was $25,307,790, which means that the State's 1 per cent amounts to $253,077.90. The State also will collect from each track 15 per cent of its net revenue. Last year Havre de Grace paid $9,162.68 on this item; Laurel, $6,486.81; Pimlico, $535, and Bowie, $1,696.11.

Since Baltimore County taxes Pimlico $3,000 for each day it operates $75,000 more must be added to racing's yield to the treasurer of State and County. The half-mile tracks and the fair meetings also will contribute a mite to the State treasury, for each of these pays a $50-a-day license fee. Revenue to the State from this source will amount to about $1,800.

Increase at Pimlico.

A check on the betting during the 1934 season shows that Pimlico, operated by the Maryland Jockey Club, is the only one of the four major tracks that enjoyed brisker business in the mutuels than it did in 1933. The total handle at the Baltimore City course was $7,978,500. That figure is $814,600 better than the total for 1933.

The following tables show the betting at the four major courses.

INSERT RACES—BULL.	@@@
Pimlico.
Fall meeting	3,950,303
Total	$7,978,500
Bowie.
Spring meeting	$2,868,762
Fall meeting	3,316,970
Total	$6,185,732
Laurel.
25-day meeting in October	$5,566,149
Havre de Grace.
Spring meeting	$3,494,929
Fall meeting	2,482,487
Total	$5,977,416

The drop at Havre de Grace almost reached the million dollar mark, stopping at $357,299. At Bowie, the fall off was $317,277 and at Laurel $657,751. The total betting last year at the four tracks in question was judging from the amount paid to the State as one per cent tax on this item $26,725,251. So the total drop this year was $1,272,608. Unfortunately for the track operators, they have to bear the great bulk of the decrease, for where the State profits on betting only to the extent of one per cent of the total, the tracks depend chiefly on their "take" of approximately 6.75 per cent of the betting for any profit their enterprise may yield.

The plan under which racing operates in Maryland provides a clear profit for the State no matter

Stretch Run Of Kuvera Futile

Only 2,500 See Card; Jockey Fowler Rides Three Victors.

FAIR GROUNDS, New Orleans, Dec. 3 (AP).—Fitkin, from the stable of A. G. Tarn, took down the Carrollton Purse, 5½ furlongs dash that topped the Fair Grounds program, this afternoon. The track, still damp from rains of yesterday, was still slow but was not deep.

The Carrollton Purse topped an ordinary card that brought out a small crowd of 2,500. Fitkin became the first two-time winner of the meeting in accounting for the dash and again he was ridden by C. Rollins.

Bump Each Other.

It was a rough race, with Betty Farrell, the favorite, Fitkin, Chief's Pride and Just High battling for the lead from the start and bumping each other repeatedly in the stretch. Fitkin survived that shuffle and had a good lead a furlong from home, but in the closing strides was being hard beset by A. Pelleteri's uvera, which came from far out of it to be second. Just High held on gamely for third, while Betty Farrell dropped out of the picture altogether.

Fitkin was second choice in the betting, paying $5.80 for $2.

The first race, at six furlongs, was won by C. Troutt's Judge Dixon, a pronounced favorite. He had the speed of his party, but had to be ridden out to stall off Lady Rockledge which came from far back to be second. Miss Gohi was third. Judge Dixon paid $4 for 2.

Fowler Rides Winner.

Gretna B., paying $9.60 for $2, took the second race which also was at six furlongs. Jockey Gene Fowler brought her from behind with a rush to win in a gallop over Playsickle. Bunty Ann was third.

Jockey E. Gross and W. Webber's Polly Diskin proved the winning combination in the third race. Gross had trouble keeping the Filly Up in the early running, but he sen her through next the rail in the stretch and she won by a length. Mokan was second and Don Vern, the favorite, a tiring third. The winner paid $5.40 for $2.

A mile race was on the fourth program. It wound up in a driving finish in which Mayco, owned by B. Hernandez, of New Orleans, came again after being headed and beat out Six Bells by a head. Hamilton was third while Le Flore, the choice, finished far back. Mayco dominated all the early running and held on gamely under god riding by L. Turner. He paid $14.20 for $2.

Mary McCarthy Scores.

The sixth race at a mile gave Jockey G. Fowler a double for the afternoon and put E. I. Burnett's mare Mary McCarthy among the two-timers. Fowler brought her from third place to run over Dusky Lass and Fountain in the stretch and she drew out to win easily over Royal purchase. Fountain held third place.

The "Talent" tapped out on the last race, a mile and a sivteenth event that brought out a big field. Jack Murphy, owned by I. E. Burnett, accounted for Jockey Fowler's third victory of the afternoon when he made every post a winning one. Lady Trust was second and Nisia third.

how heavy losses may be to the track operators. In some other States in which the business of racing is legal there is no license fee, the States depending upon a certain proportion of the betting for their revenue.

Operators of the Maryland tracks who have been complaining for several years that the license fee is much too heavy are in favor of a system of taxation based on the mutuel handle. They are looking to the coming session of the Legislature to provide taxation relief and some of them have said they would back a plan calling for abolition of the license fee and setting up as a revenue to the State, say, 2½ per cent of the mutuels handle, with another 4 per cent taken out for the tracks.

Betting on Maryland tracks has been decreasing steadily and, to the track operators, alarmingly. In 1932 a total of $35,306,932 was wagered at the four big tracks. In 1928 and 1929 betting each year totaled more than $54,000,000. In those days track operators made handsome profits. Much of these were put into improvements and into big purses.

All of the tracks, however, paid attractive dividends. During the last three or four years some of the operating organizations have had to dispense with dividends; purses and stakes values at all of the tracks have undergone heavy slashes.

GRETNA B. was much the best, being forced to race in the deepest going the first quarter, then taken back and coming with a fine burst of speed on the outside to win easily. PLAYSICKLE held on well all the way. BUNTY ANN raced TALVORES into defeat, but tired. HERVALA held on well. BUTTERFLY always was outrun.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MAYCO, $14.20, $6.60, $4.80; SIX BELLS, $5.60, $4.00; HAMILTON, $4.20.

MAYCO stole a good early lead under clever rating and, coming again after being headed, outstayed SIX BELLS. Latter, probably best, moved up fast on the turn, but was weakly ridden after getting to the front. HAMILTON held on well all the way. SQUEEZE PLAY acted badly at the post, broke from the outside, and showed good speed for six furlongs. LE FLORE always was far back.

FIFTH RACE—Five and a half furlongs. Purse, $500; claiming. The Carrollton. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, second. Went to post at 5:00. Off at 5:00½. Winner, A. G. Two-dollar mutuels paid—FITKIN, $5.80, $3.60, $3.40; KUVERA, $8.40, $7.20; JUST HIGH, $4.80.

FITKIN, well up early, fought his way through much bumping in the stretch and, gaining the lead, was safe from the rush of KUVERA. Latter, outrun early, finished with a good rush clear of interference. JUST HIGH had early speed, caused a jam, and tired. CHIEF'S PRIDE had a rough trip. BETTY FARRELL quit in the stretch after being bumped a lot. BROADSTEP was poorly ridden.

SIXTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good for all but Backward Never. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 5:26. Off at 5:35½. Winner, I. E. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MARY MCCARTHY, $7.00, $4.00, $3.20; ROYAL PURCHASE, $3.20, $2.80; FOUNTAIN, $4.00.

MARY MCCARTHY, well up early, was held in reserve until reaching the stretch, when she came with a fine rush at her rider's call and, taking the lead, won easily. ROYAL PURCHASE improved her position and finished well. FOUNTAIN tired after setting the pace. POLLY'S FOLLY went well all the way. DUSKY LASS tired badly after six furlongs.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $400, claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won handily; place, driving. Went to post at 5:00. Off at 5:00½. Winner, I. E. Two-dollar mutuels paid—JACK MURPHY, $4.60, $3.60, $3.40; LADY TRUST, $9.00, $7.40; NISIA, $3.00.

JACK MURPHY took the track from his field and was never in danger. LADY TRUST improved her position steadily and, standing a hard drive, outgamed NISIA. Latter moved up rapidly on the turn, but weakened in the last furlong. LUGANO showed an even effort. DONIE could not keep up. DONNATINA tired.

ter, and Mike Welch, guard and captain. They were Auburn's outstanding linemen and ranked high in Southern grid circles.

Added to Roster.

But, as if this were not enough, Birmingham-Southern, one of the few untied and undefeated teams in this country and champions of the S. I. A. A. Conference, have granted two members of the team permission to join the all-star forces. Those selected will be linemen.

With a backfield composed of Suther, Holley, Hubert and Cain carrying the ball, Hank Crisp, coaching the Southerners, is satisfied that there will be plenty of scoring—for Alabama.

But Pixlee, with Hickman, Pearce, Simpson, Gamblin and other well-known performers in the front line trenches, is just as satisfied that Alabama's efforts will be confined to kicking. Washington's line looks good enough to stand up with the best.

To Arrive Thursday.

Alabama will arrive in Washington Thursday morning. There will be a public workout in the afternoon at Griffith Stadium, but on Friday the team will practice behind barred gates.

A heavy advance sale indicates a large attendance Saturday. Tickets are still selling for $1.10. Saturday the price will advance to $1.65. They are obtainable at Spalding's, Griffith Stadium and Almas Temple.

Mudder Wins Feature at Downs

Cutie Face, 4-Year-Old Is Victorious in Conroe Event.

HOUSTON, Tex., Dec. 3 (AP).—Cutie Face, fast-stepping 4-year-old mare which likes the mud, won the Conroe at Epsom Downs today. She took the lead in the stretch after being held in restraint most of the way and won going away, passing the judges' stand a full length ahead of Pharatime. Her time for the three-quarters was 1:18 2-5.

Cutie Face was given a nice ride by Jockey Wall. The show horse was Stroll Along, while Terrier, one of the favorites, ran fourth, missing the money by two lengths. The winner returned $6.20 straight.

High Hand II, which finished second in the third race, was claimed by Mrs. A. M. Creech for $2,500.

Another rain yesterday made the track heavy, as it has been during most of the meet.

a. m., the starter's pistol puffs and synchronized knee caps flash in the sprints. Showgirls volunteer songs before the microphones and magnanimous parties out of the night clubs offer fat premiums for sprint victories. Present opening night were Isham Jones, George O'Brien, James Barton, Sally Rand, Roger Wolf Kahn, Stoopnagle and Budd and Jack Dempsey.

Anyone wandering in the Garden's catacombs this week will find a similar crowd. Very likely one will discover Doris Duke, the world's richest girl, and Dominic, the Mulberry street banana peddler, side by side at the hot-lunch counter.

Will Gross $130,000.

Promoter John Chapman says his show will gross $130,000 this year and the Dominics, the Gustaves and the Alphonses will contribute more than half that amount. You see day laborers, men with cracked finger nails and windburned faces wasting precious hours of sleep. You wonder why they sit and stare so eagerly at the eternal parade of "Japanese mice men." Most of them were born in lands where bicycling is the big sport.

When they were small they worked up the same hysteria over a road race that we do over a world series. If you were an American baseball fan and you emigrated—say to Bangkok—and for months on end you found yourself set down in a strange land with a strange language in your ears and no familiar sports, and suddenly the New York Giants and the Chicago Cubs came off the boat and it was advertised that they would play a game of ball you certainly would close up your shop or take leave of your job to attend, wouldn't you?

Garden Shake-up Expected Dec. 19

Is Making Money on Every Sport but Boxing.

New York, Nov. 3 (U.P.).—Madison Square Garden's board of directors is "extremely displeased" with the present boxing situation in the huge sports emporium, and a shake-up is expected at the next board meeting on December 19.

The wise men of the belt and block industry tonight believed that Col. John S. Hammond, chairman of the Garden's board, would take over supervision of boxing as he did hockey and replace the current promoter, Jimmy Johnston, with an assistant promoter, who will work directly under Hammond. Al Weill and Tom McArdle, well-known New York promoters, are most prominently mentioned for the assistant post. McArdle was Garden promoter before the Johnston regime.

The sports palace, which Tex Rickard built primarily for boxing shows, is making money now on all other attractions, while records of the fight game are being written on its ledger in red ink.

Speedy Tracks Presage New Records

Discovery, Blessed Event Fastest Turf Stars of Past Year.

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—Two world record performances on the American turf during the 1934 season give promise that the entire list of racing records may be revised during the next few years as thoroughbreds take advantage of the opportunities afforded by the fast tracks being constructed throughout the Nation.

A. G. Vanderbilt's Discovery cracked the world record for a mile and three-sixteenths in New England, running the distance in 1:55. The former world mark, 1:55 3-5, was set by Sir Barton at Saratoga in 1920.

Another Equaled.

Col. E. R. Bradley's Blessed Event equaled the world mark for a mile and one-eighth in Florida, racing it in 1:48 2-5, to share the record jointly with Hot Toddy, which set it at Belmont in 1929.

The very fact that faster tracks are aiding thoroughbreds in improving their time records will leave in dispute the age-old question of whether the race horses of the present day are the equals or superiors of the turf immortals of the past.

The Churchill Downs track had been resurfaced and never before had been so fast as the day Twenty Grand broke the Kentucky Derby record in 1931, running the mile and one-quarter in 2:01 4-5. On the same afternoon Gallant Knight ran 6½ furlongs in 1:16 1-5, breaking the world record.

Was Not Extended.

Twenty Grand was not extended in setting the derby record, which still was much slower than Whiskbroom II's disputed world record of two minutes flat. Yet it was the fastest mile and one-quarter run in many years.

Equipoise, which set the world record for a mile at 1:34 2-5 in Illinois in 1932, raced a mile and one-quarter in 2:02 the following year. The fastest time for a mile and one-quarter this year was Gallant Sir's 2:02 4-5 in the Agua Caliente Handicap.

No world records were set on the American turf in 1933, but the current year saw the record performances of Blessed Event and Discovery. Selective breeding of thoroughbreds and the growing popularity of "pasteboard" race tracks are bound to show even more results in the list of turf records in a few years.

Stocks Yield Ground in Late Trading

Market Sinks One Point; Sales Volume Cut to 752,555 Shares.

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—Lacking energy to resume the November advance, the stock market skipped into a slow decline in late dealings today.

Caution continued to rule trading in most markets. While a further small gain in steel operations pointed to gradual industrial improvement, bulls were in no haste to renew aggressive buying.

Dwindling demand for shares rather than important selling accounted largely for the retreat. Transfers dropped to 752,555 shares, compared with 801,780 last Friday and the November average of nearly 1,000,000 daily.

Traders Still Shy.

Aside from the dearth of important news, other than the Treasury financing, traders were shy of the buying side of stocks in view of the extent of the recent advance. Some additional profit taking was noted by brokers among industrial shares which had scored substantial gains on the post-election upswing.

Losses of a point or more were recorded in such issues as American Can, Air Reduction, American Commercial Alcohol, American Tobacco, Santa Fe, United States Steel common, Chrysler, Liggett & Myers B, Bethlehem Steel, J. I. Case and Timken Roller Bearing.

A few issues held early gains to the finish, mostly preferred stocks. Senior issues of American Sugar, Diamond Match, General Motors, International Nickel, McKesson & Robbins and Radio were up fractionally to about 2 points.

Stocks Drop 1 Point.

The Standard Statistics Co. average for 90 stocks, after moving in an extremely narrow range for nearly a week, dropped one point to 74.7.

Utilities generally held their ground in face of the heaviness of industrials and rails. Gold shares also went against the main currents, with Alaska Juneau and Dome Mines showing small gains at the close.

The Treasury's call on the capital market for $900,000,000 in cash focused attention on Government spending. But markets did not exhibit a recurrence of inflation sentiment, such as touched off from time to time in the last year and a half waves of buying in commodities and equities.

Dollar Holds Own.

The dollar more than held its own in foreign exchange dealings against the British pound and the French franc. The franc dipped slightly below the gold import point again. It was reported $10,000,000 more in gold had been engaged abroad for shipment to New York, making the total for the current movement $150,000,000.

Columbian Carbon joined the list of companies declaring extra dividends with a special Christmas payment of 20 cents a share.

Business observers noted with satisfaction an additional small rise in steel operations against the usual seasonal trend. The American Iron & Steel Institute estimated operations this week at 28.8 per cent of capacity, the highest since last June, compared with 28.1 last week. As expected, the first railroad loadings statements for last week disclosed sharp declines, partly accounted for by the Thanksgiving holiday.

Industry Is Now Watching Evolution of Social Insurance Plans Since Proposal of Roosevelt's Program, Observer Says.

New York, Dec. 3.—Industry is watching with keen interest the evolution of social insurance plans since the President has launched his proposals for a program of social security. Many concerns would much rather operate such plans themselves than to participate in State funds.

Several hundred concerns already have group annuity plans in operation, which leading life insurance companies have worked out upon an actuarial basis. Recently, public attention was directed anew to this form of old-age insurance when the General Foods Corporation announced such a plan. A number of other large industrial concerns are planning to follow suit.

Insurance companies report that, in the past, it has been difficult to induce employes to accept deductions from their pay envelopes to make contributions to such group annuities. However, the depression has brought home to employes generally that economic hazards of old age, and the General Foods Corporation enjoyed an enthusiastic response to its plan. Employes become more eager to join also when it is explained to them that a substantial portion of the cost of the group annuity is borne by the employer.

While insurance companies have thus perfected arrangements for offering old age insurance, a name insurance men like much less than group annuities, as well as health insurance, on an actuarially sound basis to private industry, they are far less enthusiastic about unemployment insurance. While President Roosevelt recently stated that he favored the immediate establishment of a plan of unemployment insurance upon a basis that would be actuarially sound, actuaries who have worked in the field generally deny that this is possible. If a table of rates were prepared on the basis of recent unemployment experience, in fact, the premiums would be so excessive as to make a plan utterly unfeasible. Hence, actuaries prefer to call the plan one of "unemployment reserves" rather than insurance, and indicate that during major depressions there is every reason to believe that Government relief expenditures may again become necessary in substantial amounts even if an unemployment reserve plan were in effect. Needless to say, it would not solve the immediate need for relief for the unemployed, as it would protect only those now employed who remain at work sufficiently long to become entitled to benefit payments.

Essence of Unemployment Fund Is Agreement on Contributions.

The essence of an unemployment reserve plan is the making of contributions by employers, and usually by employes as well, for a stated minimum number of weeks. Thereafter, insured workers becoming unemployed are entitled to a limited number of benefit payments from the fund, to correspond with the number of payments made into it for them.

The President has thus far favored the establishment and operation of unemployment insurance plans by the States, with the Federal Government merely administering the enormous reserves that would be accumulated under them. Wisconsin has an unemployment insurance law in actual operation. Employers, under it, contribute 2 per cent of the pay roll for all employes receiving less than $1,500 annually. Contributions began on August 1 of this year and benefits begin on July 1, 1935. The Wisconsin plan departs from European standards, however, in that its operation is based upon each enterprise as a separate unit.

During the current year 35 unemployment insurance bills were introduced in State Legislatures and in Congress and seven of these were actually adopted in one house of as many State Legislatures. The American Association for Social Security, the leading organization in this field, is sponsoring the Ohio bill which is considerably closer to European standards than that of Wisconsin. Under it, employers contribute 2 per cent and employes 1 per cent of pay rolls. Benefit payments are made on a State-wide basis to all insured workers out of the general fund.

The attitude of the President makes it appear likely that any legislation by Congress will be designed chiefly to encourage States to inaugurate such plans within their borders. Constitutional reasons, as well as recognition of profound differences in attendant conditions in various parts of the country, account for the preference for individual State plans.

Divided Opinions on Making Contributions to Retirement.

Organized labor will seek to have employers make contributions exclusively, thus increasing their wage costs correspondingly. However, the railroad retirement act passed by Congress in the last session provided that employers make two-thirds of the total contribution and employes one-third, as does the model Ohio plan, and this is likely to be the basis of the plan to be adopted in most States.

A committee of retail merchants headed by Samuel W. Reyburn, president of the Associated Dry Goods Corporation, recently made a survey to determine the likely effect on consumers of unemployment reserve plans. Under the Wisconsin, or the model Ohio law, where the employer contributes 2 per cent of his pay roll, this would amount to 0.4 per cent of selling price for enterprises where labor cost equals 20 per cent of the total. Where the labor cost equals 40 per cent of selling price, the unemployment insurance plan involves a burden of 0.8 per cent.

Bond Market Is Unchanged; At 85.2 Level

U. S. Securities Firm as Sales Volume Totals $10,541,000.

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—United States Government securities displayed a firm undertone in today's bond market, but other loans divisions moved in irregular channels.

The trading volume was only slightly higher than that of last Friday, transfers totaling $10,541,000, par value. The Standard Statistics Co. average for 60 domestic corporate issues was unchanged at 85.2.

Response Is Favorable.

The market's response to the Treasury's December financing program, involving nearly $2,000,000,000 of refunding and "new money" borrowing, was generally interpreted as favorable. While the listed 3⅛s, comparable to the new offering of 15-18-year bonds, slipped a trifle in early dealings, they closed unchanged at 101.

Treasury 3s of 1946-48 eased 1-32 of a point to 100.4, but elsewhere in the Government department gains of 1-32 to 12-32 were recorded.

The Treasury's offering of the long-term bonds was somewhat of a surprise to banking circles, but this was taken to mean that the authorities were confident of the market and had decided to "line their nest" with some $900,000,000 of new cash before Congress meets.

The consensus was that the 1⅛ per cent notes offered for cash would be heavily oversubscribed, that the 2⅛ per cent certificates would be well taken and that the bonds would be found attractive in some quarters.

On Gaining List.

Among corporation gainers of fractions to around a point or so were some issues of Alleghany Corporation, Allis-Chalmers, Certainteed, General Public Service, Interboro Rapid Transit, International Mercantile Marine, Manhattan Railway, K. C. Southern, Nassau Electric, New York Dock, North American Edison and Portland General Electric.

Losers of as much included loans of Walworth, Union Pacific, Southern Railway, Shell Union Oil, Otis Steel, Pennsylvania Railroad, New York Central, Goodrich and Chicago & Northwestern.

In the foreign list Austrian 7s of 1957 advanced 5 points to a new high at 90, and improvement was shown by the Argentines, Germans and Belgians. French obligations sagged a point or so.

Wheat Is Below Corn for First Time in Years

Cotton Closes Barely Steady at Net Declines of 9 to 18 Points.

Chicago, Dec. 3 (AP).—For the first time in five years, wheat sold here today lower than corn, and during the late dealings dragged the corn market down.

The discount for wheat was reached when No. 2 hard wheat in Chicago brought $1.08¼ a bushel, whereas No. 1 white corn commanded $1.08½, the topmost price here since July, 1929. Ending of the regular season of lake navigation, together with disappointment that the United States wheat visible supply total today showed a smaller reduction than was looked for did much also to pull grain values lower at the last.

Wheat closed unstable, ⅛ to ¾ under Saturday's finish; May, 99⅜-½; corn, shaky, ⅜ to 1 cent down; oats, unchanged to 1 cent higher, and provisions varying from 2 cents setback to a rise of 7 cents.

Late downturns of wheat prices were in the face of Buenos Aires cables estimating that only 13,000,000 bushels of wheat is available at present for export from Argentina, and that it would appear the Argentine surplus of old wheat would be entirely exhausted before anything from the Argentine new crop can be obtained for shipment.

Cotton Market

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—Cotton was moderately active today with prices generally lower under liquidation of tired long accounts and scattered hedging in the absence of aggressive support. The general market closed barely steady at net declines of 9 to 18 points.

Early price movements were irregular. In the last half of the session liquidation increased and values worked off gradually.

A few stop orders were uncovered as prices dropped below the 12½ cent mark for March and May and the disposition to sell long cotton was increased by the indifferent showing of the stock and grain markets.

Two private crop reports were issued, one placing the indicated crop at 9,592,000 bales and the other at 9,708,000.

Exports today 55,178, making 1,971,701 so far this season. Port receipts, 21,057. U. S. port stocks, 3,164,217.

Cottonseed Oil.

Bleachable cottonseed oil was featured today by the largest trade in the history of the industry with a turnover of 266 contracts. Early in the session the market advanced to new season's highs, gaining 5 to 15 points on a further sharp upturn in lard and strength of corn. A weakened technical situation later caused a break-up, 18 to 20 points, and final prices were 3 to 10 points net lower. Crude oil was firm throughout, at 9 cents per pound at all Southern points. Bleachable spot, nominal; December, closed 9.85; January, 9.90; March, 9.97; May, 10.09; July, 10.20.

Stocks Yield Ground in Late Trading

Market Sinks One Point; Sales Volume Cut to 752,555 Shares.

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—Lacking energy to resume the November advance, the stock market skipped into a slow decline in late dealings today.

Caution continued to rule trading in most markets. While a further small gain in steel operations pointed to gradual industrial improvement, bulls were in no haste to renew aggressive buying.

Dwindling demand for shares rather than important selling accounted largely for the retreat. Transfers dropped to 752,555 shares, compared with 801,780 last Friday and the November average of nearly 1,000,000 daily.

Traders Still Shy.

Aside from the dearth of important news, other than the Treasury financing, traders were shy of the buying side of stocks in view of the extent of the recent advance. Some additional profit taking was noted by brokers among industrial shares which had scored substantial gains on the post-election upswing.

Losses of a point or more were recorded in such issues as American Can, Air Reduction, American Commercial Alcohol, American Tobacco, Santa Fe, United States Steel common, Chrysler, Liggett & Myers B, Bethlehem Steel, J. I. Case and Timken Roller Bearing.

A few issues held early gains to the finish, mostly preferred stocks. Senior issues of American Sugar, Diamond Match, General Motors, International Nickel, McKesson & Robbins and Radio were up fractionally to about 2 points.

Stocks Drop 1 Point.

The Standard Statistics Co. average for 90 stocks, after moving in an extremely narrow range for nearly a week, dropped one point to 74.7.

Utilities generally held their ground in face of the heaviness of industrials and rails. Gold shares also went against the main currents, with Alaska Juneau and Dome Mines showing small gains at the close.

The Treasury's call on the capital market for $900,000,000 in cash focused attention on Government spending. But markets did not exhibit a recurrence of inflation sentiment, such as touched off from time to time in the last year and a half waves of buying in commodities and equities.

Dollar Holds Own.

The dollar more than held its own in foreign exchange dealings against the British pound and the French franc. The franc dipped slightly below the gold import point again. It was reported $10,000,000 more in gold had been engaged abroad for shipment to New York, making the total for the current movement $150,000,000.

Columbian Carbon joined the list of companies declaring extra dividends with a special Christmas payment of 20 cents a share.

Business observers noted with satisfaction an additional small rise in steel operations against the usual seasonal trend. The American Iron & Steel Institute estimated operations this week at 28.8 per cent of capacity, the highest since last June, compared with 28.1 last week. As expected, the first railroad loadings statements for last week disclosed sharp declines, partly accounted for by the Thanksgiving holiday.

Industry Is Now Watching Evolution of Social Insurance Plans Since Proposal of Roosevelt's Program, Observer Says.

New York, Dec. 3.—Industry is watching with keen interest the evolution of social insurance plans since the President has launched his proposals for a program of social security. Many concerns would much rather operate such plans themselves than to participate in State funds.

Several hundred concerns already have group annuity plans in operation, which leading life insurance companies have worked out upon an actuarial basis. Recently, public attention was directed anew to this form of old-age insurance when the General Foods Corporation announced such a plan. A number of other large industrial concerns are planning to follow suit.

Insurance companies report that, in the past, it has been difficult to induce employes to accept deductions from their pay envelopes to make contributions to such group annuities. However, the depression has brought home to employes generally that economic hazards of old age, and the General Foods Corporation enjoyed an enthusiastic response to its plan. Employes become more eager to join also when it is explained to them that a substantial portion of the cost of the group annuity is borne by the employer.

While insurance companies have thus perfected arrangements for offering old age insurance, a name insurance men like much less than group annuities, as well as health insurance, on an actuarially sound basis to private industry, they are far less enthusiastic about unemployment insurance. While President Roosevelt recently stated that he favored the immediate establishment of a plan of unemployment insurance upon a basis that would be actuarially sound, actuaries who have worked in the field generally deny that this is possible. If a table of rates were prepared on the basis of recent unemployment experience, in fact, the premiums would be so excessive as to make a plan utterly unfeasible. Hence, actuaries prefer to call the plan one of "unemployment reserves" rather than insurance, and indicate that during major depressions there is every reason to believe that Government relief expenditures may again become necessary in substantial amounts even if an unemployment reserve plan were in effect. Needless to say, it would not solve the immediate need for relief for the unemployed, as it would protect only those now employed who remain at work sufficiently long to become entitled to benefit payments.

Essence of Unemployment Fund Is Agreement on Contributions.

The essence of an unemployment reserve plan is the making of contributions by employers, and usually by employes as well, for a stated minimum number of weeks. Thereafter, insured workers becoming unemployed are entitled to a limited number of benefit payments from the fund, to correspond with the number of payments made into it for them.

The President has thus far favored the establishment and operation of unemployment insurance plans by the States, with the Federal Government merely administering the enormous reserves that would be accumulated under them. Wisconsin has an unemployment insurance law in actual operation. Employers, under it, contribute 2 per cent of the pay roll for all employes receiving less than $1,500 annually. Contributions began on August 1 of this year and benefits begin on July 1, 1935. The Wisconsin plan departs from European standards, however, in that its operation is based upon each enterprise as a separate unit.

During the current year 35 unemployment insurance bills were introduced in State Legislatures and in Congress and seven of these were actually adopted in one house of as many State Legislatures. The American Association for Social Security, the leading organization in this field, is sponsoring the Ohio bill which is considerably closer to European standards than that of Wisconsin. Under it, employers contribute 2 per cent and employes 1 per cent of pay rolls. Benefit payments are made on a State-wide basis to all insured workers out of the general fund.

The attitude of the President makes it appear likely that any legislation by Congress will be designed chiefly to encourage States to inaugurate such plans within their borders. Constitutional reasons, as well as recognition of profound differences in attendant conditions in various parts of the country, account for the preference for individual State plans.

Divided Opinions on Making Contributions to Retirement.

Organized labor will seek to have employers make contributions exclusively, thus increasing their wage costs correspondingly. However, the railroad retirement act passed by Congress in the last session provided that employers make two-thirds of the total contribution and employes one-third, as does the model Ohio plan, and this is likely to be the basis of the plan to be adopted in most States.

A committee of retail merchants headed by Samuel W. Reyburn, president of the Associated Dry Goods Corporation, recently made a survey to determine the likely effect on consumers of unemployment reserve plans. Under the Wisconsin, or the model Ohio law, where the employer contributes 2 per cent of his pay roll, this would amount to 0.4 per cent of selling price for enterprises where labor cost equals 20 per cent of the total. Where the labor cost equals 40 per cent of selling price, the unemployment insurance plan involves a burden of 0.8 per cent.

Bond Market Is Unchanged; At 85.2 Level

U. S. Securities Firm as Sales Volume Totals $10,541,000.

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—United States Government securities displayed a firm undertone in today's bond market, but other loans divisions moved in irregular channels.

The trading volume was only slightly higher than that of last Friday, transfers totaling $10,541,000, par value. The Standard Statistics Co. average for 60 domestic corporate issues was unchanged at 85.2.

Response Is Favorable.

The market's response to the Treasury's December financing program, involving nearly $2,000,000,000 of refunding and "new money" borrowing, was generally interpreted as favorable. While the listed 3⅛s, comparable to the new offering of 15-18-year bonds, slipped a trifle in early dealings, they closed unchanged at 101.

Treasury 3s of 1946-48 eased 1-32 of a point to 100.4, but elsewhere in the Government department gains of 1-32 to 12-32 were recorded.

The Treasury's offering of the long-term bonds was somewhat of a surprise to banking circles, but this was taken to mean that the authorities were confident of the market and had decided to "line their nest" with some $900,000,000 of new cash before Congress meets.

The consensus was that the 1⅛ per cent notes offered for cash would be heavily oversubscribed, that the 2⅛ per cent certificates would be well taken and that the bonds would be found attractive in some quarters.

On Gaining List.

Among corporation gainers of fractions to around a point or so were some issues of Alleghany Corporation, Allis-Chalmers, Certain-teed, General Public Service, Interboro Rapid Transit, International Mercantile Marine, Manhattan Railway, K. C. Southern, Nassau Electric, New York Dock, North American Edison and Portland General Electric.

Losers of as much included loans of Walworth, Union Pacific, Southern Railway, Shell Union Oil, Otis Steel, Pennsylvania Railroad, New York Central, Goodrich and Chicago & Northwestern.

In the foreign list Austrian 7s of 1957 advanced 5 points to a new high at 90, and improvement was shown by the Argentines, Germans and Belgians. French obligations sagged a point or so.

Curb's Prices Turn Mixed; Sales Smaller

Utilities Holding Steady; Trading Volume Cut to 137,000 Shares.

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—Irregularity prevailed on the curb market today. Dealings were rather light and tended toward the selling side near the close.

Utilities were steady, with Electric Bond & Share and American Gas & Electric finishing about unchanged. A number of specialties were higher, but small declines predominated in the alcohols and oils.

Crane Co. preferred got up some 16 points in small flurry of buying. Fajardo Sugar, dipped 4.

Pan American Airways and Babcock & Wilcox were firm spots. Lake Shore, Parker Rust Proof, Wright Hargreaves and International Petroleum held fairly steady, while recessions of fractions to around a point appeared in Aluminum Company of America, American Cyanamid B, Creole Petroleum, Gulf Oil, Lynch Corporation, Newmont, Sherwin-Williams, Swift Internacionale, Distillers Corporation-Seagrams and Hiram Walker.

Transfers dwindled to 137,000 shares, compared with 155,000 last Friday.

New York, Dec. 3.—Favorable dividend changes in November totaled 124, against 80 in October and 85 in November, 1933, according to the Standard Statistics Co. of New York. Gossip of New York Markets

By Claude A. Jagger.

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—High chieftains of industry are holding one of their biggest powwows in years this week, intent upon taking their places on President Roosevelt's all-American recovery team, and at the same time presenting their program to defeat depression.

Today is the first of four days of sessions at the Waldorf-Astoria, sponsored by the National Association of Manufacturers, which has called a "congress of American industry * * * to formulate a program upon which it can stand unitedly."

That cooperation with the Administration will be the keynote goes without saying. It has been the fashion at such gatherings since the American Bankers Association convention in Washington six weeks ago, where President Roosevelt called for his "all-American team" from an alliance of "business and banking, agriculture and industry, labor and capital."

Nevertheless, with such momentous questions as the future of the NRA coming before the Congress in Washington next month, the industrial leaders have called together their little "congress" as a sounding board for a program of their own.

Many of the industrialists say they are fully aware that such sweeping generalizations as demands for "an immediate balancing of the budget," or "an end of Government interference" will not suffice.

Administration spokesmen have asserted that the Government is ready to retire from the normal fields of individual initiative as soon as business will take up the slack through providing employment and capital. Donald R. Richberg, head of the President's National Emergency Council, has been traveling about for weeks making public speeches to business men and attending private dinners with business leaders, and Raymond Moley, former No. 1 brain truster, has been meeting privately with small groups of executives. Both will address the sessions this week.

But while stressing their willingness to cooperate, the program of the four-day conclave calls for consideration of a number of New Deal aspects, which many business leaders assert, tend to obstruct private industry in its effort to take up the slack.

The first two days will be taken up with meetings of the National Industrial Council, composed of representatives of several hundred State and local manufacturers associations. Two government activities that many business executives complain of will be discussed at a luncheon meeting of this council. They are the activities of the FERA in providing Government-sponsored factories for the unemployed to manufacture furniture, mattresses and other consumers goods and the Federal power program, particularly the TVA.

With the future of the NRA in mind, the Manufacturers Association committee on "the future relationship of government to industry" has prepared a report, after submitting a questionnaire to several thousand concerns. While the nature of the report has not been disclosed, some usually well-informed quarters look for a plea for self-government of industry under government supervised rules of fair play.

Labor problems, particularly those arising under section 7(a) of the recovery act, also will be up for consideration. Former Gov. Kohler of Wisconsin, fresh from the labor controversy at his own plant at Kohler, Wis., will lead the discussion.

The association anticipates an attendance of between 500 and 750 industrialists. The invitations, which were sent out over the signatures of a score of heads of leading corporations, said:

"Industry has before it at this time a duty of imposing proportions that must be met squarely. Recovery problems face the country. They demand the best thought and help of all the people. Elected officials who invite assistance are entitled to the full assistance of industry in working out a sound basis of cooperation which will restore economic stability."

Wheat Is Below Corn for First Time in Years

Cotton Closes Barely Steady at Net Declines of 9 to 18 Points.

Chicago, Dec. 3 (AP).—For the first time in five years, wheat sold here today lower than corn, and during the late dealings dragged the corn market down.

The discount for wheat was reached when No. 2 hard wheat in Chicago brought $1.08¼ a bushel, whereas No. 1 white corn commanded $1.08½, the topmost price here since July, 1929. Ending of the regular season of lake navigation, together with disappointment that the United States wheat visible supply total today showed a smaller reduction than was looked for did much also to pull grain values lower at the last.

Wheat closed unstable, ⅛ to ¾ under Saturday's finish; May, 99⅝-½; corn, shaky, ⅝ to 1 cent down; oats, unchanged to 1 cent higher, and provisions varying from 2 cents setback to a rise of 7 cents.

Late downturns of wheat prices were in the face of Buenos Aires cables estimating that only 13,000,000 bushels of wheat is available at present for export from Argentina, and that it would appear the Argentine surplus of old wheat would be entirely exhausted before anything from the Argentine new crop can be obtained for shipment.

Cotton Market

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—Cotton was moderately active today with prices generally lower under liquidation of tired long accounts and scattered hedging in the absence of aggressive support. The general market closed barely steady at net declines of 9 to 18 points.

Early price movements were irregular. In the last half of the session liquidation increased and values worked off gradually.

A few stop orders were uncovered as prices dropped below the 12½ cent mark for March and May and the disposition to sell long cotton was increased by the indifferent showing of the stock and grain markets.

Two private crop reports were issued, one placing the indicated crop at 9,592,000 bales and the other at 9,708,000.

Exports today 55,178, making 1,971,701 so far this season. Port receipts, 21,057. U. S. port stocks, 3,164,217.

Bleachable cottonseed oil was featured today by the largest trade in the history of the industry with a turnover of 266 contracts. Early in the session the market advanced to new season's highs, gaining 5 to 15 points on a further sharp upturn in lard and strength of corn. A weakened technical situation later caused a break-up, 18 to 20 points, and final prices were 3 to 10 points net lower. Crude oil was firm throughout, at 9 cents per pound at all Southern points.
